excerpt from the political history of poland the great war has placed the polish question foremost among the political problems which must be solved at the close of the present hostilities with the progress of the war has come increased opportunity for a just and equitable recognition of poland s national and political rights russia and the central powers have been outbidding each other in their promises to poland as a matter of expediency by their act of november 5 1916 the central powers allowed that part of poland which was under russian rule prior to the outbreak of the war to be organized into a polish state the contingencies of the war as well as the pressure brought to bear upon the governments of germany and austria hungary by the poles forced the two emperors to proclaim this act they did it reluctantly and after long delay realizing that it was a step toward a truly independent polish state and that such a state is unthinkable without an outlet to the sea which can be obtained only by the cession of the polish possessions now held by prussia and without galicia where polish national life has had its fullest and most intense expression during the present war galicia has borne the same relation to poland s independence as piedmont in cavour s time bore to the unification and liberation of italy whatever motives the central powers may have had in proclaiming poland s independence and whatever plans they might have laid for its future undoing by this act they have put the polish question on an international basis and have made russia s earlier promises for polish autonomy under russian sovereignty appear very insignificant what is more important however is that they have thus made it possible for poland to express in no mistaken terms her demand for complete
