based on an extensive collection of letters written from the home front and the battlefront family war stories offers fresh insights into how the reciprocal nature of family correspondence can shape a family's understanding of the war. Family war stories examines the contribution of the Densmore family to the northern civil war effort. It extends the boundaries of research in two directions: first by describing how members of this white family from Minnesota were mobilized to fight a family war on the home front and the battlefield, and second by exploring how the war challenged the family's abolitionist beliefs and racial attitudes. Family war stories argues that the totality of the family's civil war experience was intricately shaped by the dynamics of family life and the reciprocal nature of family correspondence. Further, it argues that the serving sons' understanding of the war was shaped by their direct military experiences in the army camps and battlefields and how their loved ones at home interpreted these experiences. With two sons serving as officers in the United States Colored Troops regiments fighting in the Mississippi Valley, the Densmore family was heavily involved in destroying slavery. Family war stories analyses how the sons' military experiences tested the family's abolitionist ideology and its commitment to white racial superiority. It also explains how the family sought to accommodate the presence of a refugee from slavery working in the family kitchen. In some ways, the presence of this worker in the household posed an even greater range of challenges to the family's racial beliefs than the sons' military service. By examining one family's deep involvement in the war against slavery, Wilson analyses how the civil war posed particular challenges to northerners committed to abolitionism and white supremacy.

British Irish history from c. 1900: compelling and moving real-life accounts of the impact on family life of the return of the troops at the end of the Second World War. Summer 1945: Britain was in a jubilant mood at last the war was over soon the men would be coming home then everything would be fine life would get back to normal or would it? Six long years of war had profoundly changed family life. For years Dad had been a khaki figure in a photograph on the wall, a crumpled letter from overseas, an occasional visitor on weekend leave. Now he was here to stay, a stranger in a group that had learned to live without him and was not always prepared to have him back most homecomings were joyful never to be forgotten moments of humour and hope others were hard and there was no one to deal with the tears and the trauma it would take hope and courage for families to live and love together again anzac memories was first published to acclaim in 1994 and has achieved international renown for its pioneering contribution to the study of war memory and mythology michael mckernan wrote that the book gave as good a picture of the impact of the great war on individuals and australia as we are likely to get in this generation and michael roper concluded that an immense achievement of this book is that it so clearly illuminates the historical processes that left men like my grandfather forever struggling to fashion myths which they could live by in this new edition alistair thomson explores how the anzac legend has transformed over the past quarter century how a post memory of the great war creates new challenges and opportunities for making sense of the national past and how veterans war memories can still challenge and complicate national mythologies he returns to a family war history that he could not write about twenty years ago because of the stigma of war and mental illness and he uses newly released repatriation files to question his own earlier account of veterans post war lives and memories and to think afresh about war and memory it was 1940 and many of the younger members of the adams family were caught up in the war in france boots now a major and on the staff of general sir henry simms was one of the thousands of british troops trying to escape in the armada of little boats from dunkirk his son tim and nephew bobby were also struggling to reach the coast and safety while eloise was with the ats awaiting the homecoming soldiers at portsmouth with a comforting cup of tea and a ticket home boots and tim both made it safely back but of bobby there was no sign and the family all feared the worst in a farm some miles from dunkirk however bobby was alive but injured and trapped by the advancing germans the farmer and his wife offered him refuge but helene the farmer s independent minded daughter was scathing about the retreating british army and gave the brave joking young sergeant a hard time working in the fields dodging the german soldiers bobby was desperately looking for a way to escape and helene despite her hostility found herself increasingly anxious to help the englishman to get back home their adventures were to thrill the adams family when they came to hear about it
