excerpt the night was as black as ink not a solitary twinkling star looked out through that wide expanse of shadow which our great poet has called the blanket of the dark clouds covered the heaven the moon had not risen to tinge them even with grey and the sun had too long set to leave one faint streak of purple upon the edge of the western sky trees houses villages fields and gardens all lay in one profound obscurity and even the course of the high road itself required eyes well accustomed to night travelling to be able to distinguish it as it wandered on through a rich part of hampshire amidst alternate woods and meadows in this landmark study of agincourt prize winning author juliet barker draws upon a huge range of sources published and unpublished english and french to give a compelling account of a battle upon which so many legends have been built but she also looks behind the action on the field to paint a portrait of the age a mad king murderous dukes scheming bishops knightly heroes surgeons heralds spies and pirates the story of agincourt has them all back cover agincourt took place on 25 october 1415 and was a turning point not only in the hundred years war between england and france but also in the history of weaponry azincourt as it is now is in the pas de calais and the french were famously defeated by an army led by henry v henry v s stunning victory revived england s military prestige and greatly strengthened his territorial claims in france the exhausted english army of about 9 000 men was engaged by 20 000 frenchmen but the limited space of battle favoured the more compact english forces the undisciplined charges of the french combined with the exceptional skill of the english archers contributed to a pivotal moment in european warfare not more than 1 600 english soldiers died the french probably lost more than 6 000 men juliet barker s shimmeringly brilliant narrative commemorates and analyses a canonical battle in british history
