this volume provides an challenging and controversial explanation of the recent events in russia it examines the causes processes and consequences of russia's recent political development drawing on and criticizing the existing literature the book also shows how the recent russian experience casts light on general theories of revolution and comparative political developments the transformation in russia is usually compared with transformations in other post communist countries the authors argue that the russian transformation should be explained in the logic of the great revolutions of the past such as the english civil war the french revolution and the bolshevik revolution the difficulties and inconsistency of russian reforms are usually explained as a result of mistakes made by reformers this book argues however that these problems should be considered as a natural consequence of the weak state in revolution the weakness of state power is inevitable resulting from social fragmentation property rights transformation changes in the interests of different social groups hence the authors argue that most of the transitional problems in russia were unavoidable the authors go on to argue that revolutions are usually considered as rapid change made through violence however the spontaneous character of change in the situation of a weak state is a much more important feature of any revolution than violence the book contains unique interviews with four leaders of the russian transformation mikhaïl gorbachev alexander yakovlev yegor gaidar and gennadii burbulis as well as the personal experience of the authors who were deeply involved in the practical process of russian transformation

The Military Revolution and Revolutions in Military Affairs updates two central debates in military history: the one surrounding the concept of military revolution and the one on military affairs. Whilst advancing original research in both fields, only a handful of publications consider the military revolution and the RMA in tandem. This book breaks new ground conceptually and appeals to an exceptionally large and diverse readership. Comparative revisionist studies of the military revolution and RMA better enable us to comprehend the historical continuum and reveal the new RMA for what it is and for what it is shortly to become. This book presents original contributions within the epicentre of the military revolution debate: the 1500s with an emphasis on gunpowder revolution, offensively and defensively. The connections with the revolution in military affairs are then made explicit by scholars, a practitioner and an analyst with an emphasis on airborne lethal autonomous weapons systems. This is a chronologically broad and unique methodological approach to a historical debate that begs for clarification as we enter an era where killer robots will almost certainly take from humans their monopoly on violence.

Many people want to understand what revolutions are and especially how they come about. From the academics who study them to the states that wish to prevent or in some cases provoke them, but it is arguably the US scholar Theda Skocpol who has done most to create a viable model of revolution. Her work, in which she sets out her intellectual 'stall', Skocpol's magnum opus, can be considered a classic product of the critical thinking skill of problem solving. She assesses several different revolutions: those of France, Russia, and China, and asks new, productive questions about their causes and outcomes. The answers collectively allow her to move beyond existing theories such as the voluntarist school, which suggests that revolutionaries have agency, and the Marxist school, which sees state institutions as nothing more than a front for class interests. Skocpol's model assumes that states are autonomous bureaucratic institutions which act in their own interests. A fundamental re-imagining based on fresh interpretations of the evidence, her analysis extends beyond the causes of revolution to their consequences. Her argument that the revolutionary state that survives is the one that successfully implements a far-reaching program of reform helps to explain not only why the three revolutions she studied have proved enduringly influential, but also why hundreds of others, less successful, are barely remembered today.

Repeating Revolutions examines how activists, intellectuals, social scientists, and historians looked to France's revolutionary past to negotiate Algeria's struggle for decolonization from the 1930s to the 1960s. The French empire justified their claims over Algeria in part through messages of universal progress, marked by the political visions tied to the French Revolution. Supporters of Algerian independence confronted those historical claims by identifying the Algerian cause with the French Revolution and by highlighting the apparent contradictions between the history of 1789 and imperial rule. Far-right activists meanwhile saw the movement to decolonize Algeria as another manifestation of the revolutionary disorder stemming from the French Revolution. Behind these analogies lay broader changes in the study of North African society and contemporary political relevance of the French Revolution. The focus on analogies to the French Revolution puts different sets of actors in conversation with one another and offers a fresh take on how people's experiences and expectations changed throughout the Algerian war. This book will appeal to readers interested in the intellectual history of decolonization, the historiography of the French Revolution, the historiography of North African studies, and questions of historical comparison and conceptual change.
