national armies as we know them today are a comparatively recent development it has been assumed that the romans had an army similar to the national institutions of advanced almost exclusively european powers at the end of the nineteenth century but the assumption was wrong as is the belief that changes seen in the armies can be explained because the romans reformed their armies up to the death of augustus the romans had no permanent military forces roman armies were raised for particular campaigns and disbanded at their conclusion repeated campaigns were conducted in places like northern italy and spain but the armies were always disbanded these armies were not seen by romans as part of a national institution as modern armies are they were simply a part of the life of a roman citizen like religion or elections these armies were more like a militia than a national army there is little evidence even of systematic training and what changes can be detected can be better explained by contingent adaptation to circumstances rather than reform the emperor augustus is commonly seen as the originator of the imperial armies but it was an unintended outcome of a long life rome was a martial state its extensive empire was arduously acquired through a succession of intensely fought conflicts in the fourth century bc rome a city of little significance secured its survival by the establishment of complex alliances with surrounding communities the romans extended their dominance southward into campania near the bay of naples and secured land along the tiber valley due to multiple triumphs this was a gradual process of consistent consolidation and incremental advancement two notable events were the defeat of the samnites in 295 bc which enabled roman expansion in central italy and pyrrhus s failed assault on the greek adriatic coast in 280 bc pyrrhus successfully disembarked his forces in tarentum modern day taranto located in the heel of italy however he was unable to secure a roman capitulation pyrrhus retreated after five years of conflict in sicily and southern italy avoiding the peril of defeat due to the overextension of his limited resources
