this study investigates the impact of the pakistan remittance initiative pri on remittance flows to pakistan in 2009 the government of pakistan launched the pri aimed at facilitating the flow of remittances sent home by non resident pakistanis the pri is comprised of multiple incentive schemes that are aimed at making remittance transfer faster cheaper and more convenient and at increasing the attractiveness of formal channels of transfer relative to informal channels i find that the pri is associated with a significant increase in the formal remittances sent to pakistan as well as a strong shift in the channels used for remittance transfer estimates suggest that while the pri led to a significant reallocation of remittances away from the informal channel to the formal channel it is not clear that it has increased the total amount of remittances received using a new quarterly panel database on remittances 71 countries over the period 2011q1 2020q4 this paper investigates the elasticity of remittances to transaction costs in a high frequency and dynamic setting it adds to the literature by systematically exploring the heterogeneity in the cost elasticity of remittances along several country characteristics the findings suggest that cost reductions have a short term positive impact on remittances that dissipates beyond one quarter according to our estimates reducing transaction costs to the sustainable development goal target of 3 percent could generate an additional us 32bn in remittances higher that the direct cost savings from lower transaction costs thus suggesting an absolute elasticity greater than one among remittance cost mitigation factors higher competition in the remittance market a deeper financial sector and adequate correspondent banking relationships are associated with a lower elasticity of remittance to transaction costs similarly remittance cost adaptation factors such as enhanced transparency in remittance costs improved financial literacy and higher ict development coincide with remittances being less sensitive to transaction costs supplementing the panel analysis the use of micro data from the usa mexico corridor confirm that migrants facing higher transaction costs tend to remit less and that this effect is less pronounced for skilled migrants and those that have access to a bank account this paper uses data across 365 corridors to document time and country variation in remittance fees and explore factors predicting variation in remittance fees we document a general reduction in such fees over the past decade although the goal of fees below 3 percent has not been met yet in many corridors we identify both cost and risk based constraints and market structure as barriers to lower remittance fees higher transaction costs as result of a more rural population in the sending country and lower scale are associated with higher remittance fees however lower risks due to the stability of fixed exchange rates and internet rather than cash payment are associated with lower remittance fees finally remittance corridors dominated by banks and few players are characterized by higher fees this paper investigates factors that predict variation in digital and non digital remittance fees over time and across countries exploring differences between capdr and other regions the paper fills a void in the literature on how country and corridor specific factors relate to remittance fees at different levels of digitalization of the transaction mode it also complements stylized facts and regression analysis with a survey analysis of the capdr authorities views on the latest developments possibilities and risks related to digital remittances with a view to gauging the authorities potential role in further reducing the cost of cross border payments more generally and remittances fees in particular the paper finds a clear trend of declining remittance fees across countries and at any level of digitalization albeit they remain higher for capdr countries relative to non capdr countries more competition financial and digital development in receiving countries such as debit credit card ownership or bank branch penetration are associated with lower remittance fees especially in capdr the surveyed authorities actively explore the use of digital money to advance domestic payment systems expedite financial inclusion and lower remittances fees yet see considerable risks especially for preserving monetary sovereignty in capdr

there has been a global push to decrease the cost of remittances since at least 2009 which has culminated with its inclusion in the sustainable
