restitution reparation renaming the colonial past is omnipresent in today's cultural political and academic debates christina haritos sheds light on the post colonial power dynamics that shape these discussions by analyzing german and namibian journalistic coverage of the herero and nama genocide with a focus on the german namibian genocide negotiations between 2015 and 2021 she thus offers a much needed entangled perspective on how journalism evokes colonial memories to maintain or challenge colonial power relations the study shows how journalism navigates colonial gaps in the archive to render certain perspectives in visible and to determine whose past can be used to make claims for a common future
