arises from a conference held in 2008 in dakar senegal hosted by the council for the development of social science research in africa codesria research on cities worldwide still takes its cue from cities in europe and the us which are seen as the standard model however cities in the global south are undergoing a much more rapid transformation including multiple interlinked transitions with africa featuring the highest urbanization rates world wide scholars therefore call for a new approach to urban studies which examines cities from a more global comparative perspective this book discusses the new approach which pays added attention to the role that societal creativity plays in processes of urbanization instead of concentrating exclusively on expert driven planning and intervention especially in fast growing cities with weaker institutional capacity for interventions the interplay between intervention and invention between expert and societal agency becomes more tangible and all the more significant series swiss african studies schweizerische afrikastudien etudes africaines suisses vol 10 this book explains how and why cities on the african continent have grown at such a rapid pace how municipal authorities have tried to cope with this massive influx of people and how long time urban residents and newcomers interact negotiate and struggle over access to limited resources a study of how colonial and postcolonial legacies manifest in african cities and african urban planning cities in sub saharan africa are experiencing rapid population growth yet their economic growth has not kept pace why one factor might be low capital investment due in part to africa s relative poverty other regions have reached similar stages of urbanization at higher per capita gdp this study however identifies a deeper reason african cities are closed to the world compared with other developing cities cities in africa produce few goods and services for trade on regional and international markets to grow economically as they are growing in size. Africa's cities must open their doors to the world. They need to specialize in manufacturing along with other regionally and globally tradable goods and services and to attract global investment in tradables. Production cities must develop scale economies which are associated with successful urban economic development in other regions. Such scale economies can arise in Africa and they will if city and country leaders make concerted efforts to bring agglomeration effects to urban areas. Today potential urban investors and entrepreneurs look at Africa and see crowded, disconnected and costly cities. Such cities inspire low expectations for the scale of urban production and for returns on invested capital. How can these cities become economically dense not merely crowded? How can they acquire efficient connections and how can they draw firms and skilled workers with a more affordable, livable urban environment? From a policy standpoint the answer must be to address the structural problems affecting African cities. Foremost among these problems are institutional and regulatory constraints that misallocate land and labor, fragment physical development and limit productivity. As long as African cities lack functioning land markets and regulations and early coordinated infrastructure investments they will remain local cities closed to regional and global markets, trapped into producing only locally traded goods and services and limited in their economic growth.

Africa's Pulse is a biannual publication containing an analysis of the near term macroeconomic outlook for the region. It also includes a section focusing on a topic that represents a particular development challenge for the continent. It is produced by the Office of the Chief Economist for the Africa Region. This issue is an analysis of issues shaping Africa's economic future. Growth remains stable in Sub-Saharan Africa. Some countries are seeing a slowdown but the region's economic prospects remain broadly favorable. External risks of higher global financial market volatility and lower growth in emerging market economies weigh on the downside. In several Sub-Saharan African countries large budgetary imbalances are a source of vulnerability to exogenous shocks and underscore the need for rebuilding fiscal buffers. In these countries the Ebola outbreak is exacting a heavy human and economic toll on affected countries and if not rapidly contained the risk of wider contagion grows without a scale up of effective interventions. Growth would slow markedly not only in the core countries Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone but also in the sub-region as transportation, cross border trade and supply chains are severely disrupted. In Sub-Saharan Africa growth in agriculture and services is more effective at reducing poverty than growth in industry. Structural transformation has a role to play in accelerating poverty reduction in Sub-Saharan Africa. Increasing agricultural productivity will be critical to fostering structural transformation. Boosting rural income diversification can facilitate this transformation as well. Investments in rural public goods and services for example education, health, rural roads, electricity and ICT including in small towns will be conducive to lifting productivity in the rural economy. Although Sub-Saharan Africa's pattern of growth has largely bypassed manufacturing, growing the region's manufacturing base especially by improving its fundamentals, lower transport costs, cheaper and more reliable power and a more educated labor force will benefit all sectors.

the facts of africa s rapid urbanisation are startling by 2030 african cities will have grown by more than 350 million people and over half the continent s population will be urban yet in the minds of policy makers scholars and much of the general public africa remains a quintessentially rural place this lack of awareness and robust analysis means it is difficult to make a policy case for a more overtly urban agenda as a result there is across the continent insufficient urgency directed to responding to the challenges and opportunities associated with the world s last major wave of urbanisation drawing on the expertise of scholars and practitioners associated with the african centre for cities and utilising a diverse array of case studies africa s urban revolution provides a comprehensive insight into the key issues demographic cultural political technical environmental and economic surrounding african urbanisation
