a major implication of fiscal federalism is that local governments with more strongly redistributive policies than their neighbors will lose taxable resources while attracting greater numbers of poorer households thus we expect local governments to under provide redistributive programs relative to the social optimum nevertheless data show that local governments in the u s play a significant role in providing and financing social welfare services such as housing health care and public welfare how do we explain the large local role in provision and finance of redistributive policies and variations in the provision and finance arrangements that local governments make this dissertation argues that the size of the local social welfare role and variations in that role across communities can principally be explained by variations in local competitive advantages and in the level of interjurisdictional competition that is some communities have a degree of monopoly power over the local tax base that can be exploited for redistributive purposes making them limited leviathans the exercise of this monopoly power for redistribution is especially likely to occur when racial and ethnic minorities are incorporated into the local policymaking process i test this theory through statistical analysis of the social welfare expenditures and provision and finance arrangements of u s urban municipalities in 1997 i further confirm these results through a comparative analysis of low income housing policies in four indiana cities my conclusions suggest that variations in monopoly power do lead to significant variations in redistributive policy outcomes across municipalities as do variations in african american and hispanic population and in intergovernmental revenues
