in the wake of world war i british attempts to exclude american oil companies from iraq and persia caused serious strains in anglo american relations in may 1921 an oil entente was reached that granted american oil companies an open door and equal opportunity in iraq and in return america acknowledged british domination of persia and monopoly of its oil this entente was soon tested when persians gave an oil concession to the sinclair oil company of new york and tried to rid themselves of the recently installed pahlavi dictatorship it was in the midst of this unrest in may of 1924 that american vice consul robert imbrie arrived in tehran almost immediately after his arrival imbrie began sending reports to washington that were highly critical of the british policies in persia on july 18 1924 imbrie was brutally murdered in tehran supposedly by a mob of religious fanatics to save face and avoid international complications the u s government accepted the persian government s version of the killing in this detailed examination of anglo american american persian and anglo persian relations author mohammad gholi majd argues that imbrie was in fact the victim of a conspiracy using records of the u s department of state this text examines how the murder enabled britain to maintain its monopoly of persian oil and further consolidate the pahlavi dictatorship the killing of imbrie ultimately facilitated the consummation of the anglo american oil entente
