nowhere is teachers lives and work more challenging than in jamaican schools teachers in jamaica are regularly faced with limited resources and challenging students teacher pay has been historically low and current conditions continue a long tradition of providing minimal compensation for teachers work recent school reform efforts has been successful in producing a teaching force that is better educated than ever before and yet teachers are seldom given the autonomy in decision making and or respect that accompanies the work of comparable professions coupled with these issues teachers regularly face hunger poverty behavioral issues and a lack of parental support as part and parcel of their experience in 21st century schools if teachers are perceived as having low professional status it is not surprising that they are often blamed for the shortcomings of jamaican schools the citizens of jamaica are firmly committed to the notion that every child can learn every child must learn however the reality is that while all children can learn many children do not learn in this country where the allocation of resources favors the rich and disowns the poor public schools in jamaica vary tremendously across the fourteen parishes geography and social class regularly determine both the context and circumstances of teachers work and yet discussions of teachers seldom acknowledge the differences there is a place for a more in depth examination of teachers work and teachers lives in jamaica where a consideration of the emergence of teacher leadership and higher professional status can intersect with a vision of new roles and responsibilities for teachers while many of the reports on jamaican education consider the role of administrative leaders there is an absence of any discussion of the role of teacher leaders is school reform it is interesting that a country can advocate for higher levels of teacher preparation and an upgrading of the professional status of teachers and yet ignore the potential power of teachers as major actors directing efforts to reform the schools teachers acting as leaders in a profession dominated by women would challenge the status quo and usurp preconceived notions regarding the work of teachers in this book 21st century descriptions of teachers lives and work will accompany a consideration of how the transformation of the teaching profession could positively impact both schools and classrooms across the island bachelor thesis from the year 2015 in the subject psychology social psychology grade 2 1 university of derby course bachelors honours psychology language english abstract this qualitative interpretive phenomenological study uses semi structured interviews from 5 jamaican teachers to investigate their experiences of control in the classroom since 2005 the ministry of education in jamaica prohibited the use of corporal punishment cp in early childhood settings but there is research to show that children are still receiving physical punishment and teachers have been reported to still be using cp in schools using interpretive phenomenological analysis across all 5 participants revealed a strong influence of cultural norms that encourages the use of cp a lack of support from the jamaican teachers association and the ministry of education ineffective teacher training courses and lack of support from the community causing these teachers to still rely on cp for want of a better solutions in light of these findings this study hopes to provide insight for education policy makers to provide effective classroom management modules at teacher training college introduction of school intervention programmes parenting programmes and to better support its teachers to eliminate the use of cp across jamaica not just in schools alone
