in early modern china jesuit missionaries associated with the male elite of confucian literati in order to proselytize more freely but they had limited contact with women whose ritual spaces were less accessible historians of catholic evangelism have similarly directed their attention to the devotional practices of men neglecting the interior spaces in chinese households where women worshipped and undertook the transmission of catholicism to family members and friends nadine amsler's investigation brings the domestic and devotional practices of women into sharp focus uncovering a rich body of evidence that demonstrates how chinese households functioned as sites of evangelization religious conflict and indigenization of christianity the resulting exploration of gendered realms in seventeenth century china reveals networks of religious sociability and ritual communities among women as well as women's remarkable acts of private piety. Amsler's exhaustive archival research and attention to material culture reveals new insights about women's agency and domestic activities illuminating areas of Chinese and Catholic history that have remained obscure if not entirely invisible for far too long. The open access publication of this book was made possible by grants from the Swiss National Science Foundation and the James P. Geiss and Margaret Y. Hsu Foundation.

This book considers how writing over the period of a century justified and was affected by the introduction and extension of British domination of India, thus demonstrating the link between writing and the ideological, economic, and political climate and debates.
