metaphor has been an issue of intense research and debate for decades see for example 1 researchers in various disciplines including linguistics psychology computer science education and philosophy have developed a variety of theories and much progress has been made 2 for one metaphor is no longer considered a rhetorical flourish that is found mainly in literary texts rather linguists have shown that metaphor is a pervasive phenomenon in everyday language a major force in the development of new word meanings and the source of at least some grammatical function words 3 indeed one of the most influential theories of metaphor involves the suggestion that the commonality of metaphoric language results because cross domain mappings are a major determinant in the organization of semantic memory as cognitive and neural resources for dealing with concrete domains are recruited for the conceptualization of more abstract ones 4 researchers in cognitive neuroscience have explored whether particular kinds of brain damage are associated with metaphor production and comprehension deficits and whether similar brain regions are recruited when healthy adults understand the literal and metaphorical meanings of the same words see 5 for a review whereas early research on this topic focused on the issue of the role of hemispheric asymmetry in the comprehension and production of metaphors 6 in recent years cognitive neuroscientists have argued that metaphor is not a monolithic category and that metaphor processing varies as a function in recent years work surrounding theories of embodiment and the role of the putative mirror neuron system mns in humans has gained considerable attention if humans have developed a network of neurons that fire in response to other beings actions as has been shown in macaques this system could have vast implications for all kinds of cognitive processes unique to humans such as language learning empathy and communication in general the goal of tapping into and understanding such a system is a fascinating yet challenging one one form of embodiment embodied linguistics suggests that the way we process linguistic information is linked to our physical experience of the concept conveyed by each word the interaction between these cognitive systems i.e. language and motor processing may occur thanks to the firing of neurons making up the mns the possible interdependence between different cognitive systems has implications for healthy as well as pathological profiles and in fact work in recent years has also explored the role of embodiment and or the mns in clinical populations such as stroke parkinson s disease alzheimer s disease and autism among others research on embodiment and or the mns has been approached with a number of different methodologies but the results obtained with these different methodologies have not been entirely consistent generating doubts regarding the theories the question has been raised as to what this line of inquiry can gain from the types of evidence contributed by functional neuroimaging methods carried out with healthy volunteers versus behavioral or lesion symptom mapping methods employed with neurologically compromised individuals of particular interest are the clinical applications of this line of research if indeed a system exists which reflects a tight link between for example the human language and motor systems then the obvious challenge is to tap into this system to create useful therapies that can provide rehabilitation where damage has occurred this research topic brought together work conducted with healthy and patient populations using several behavioral and imaging techniques as well as insightful commentaries and opinion pieces we believe the combined work of the participating authors is an important contribution to this intriguing line of research and an excellent point of reference for future work deals with different types of figurative language and the question of why and how these should be taught in second language teaching in order to prove that figurative language is essential in communication and therefore needs to receive more attention in schools i start by analysing and comparing the concepts of metaphors idioms and proverbs many scholars have discussed metaphors and so as to outline the most important aspects i refer to lakoff johnson ortony and langlotz amongst others those aspects will include the differences between novel and conventional metaphors the different functions that metaphors fulfil and the phenomenon of mixed metaphors when discussing idioms i focus on their relationship to metaphorical language the aspect of frozenness and their functions as well as other topics here scholars like swinney skandara and götz are quoted and their propositions towards idiomatic language are analysed to end the first part of the paper i discuss the relationship of proverbs to metaphors and idioms and base this part on norrick in order to focus on didactic content and the issue of distinguishing between a proverb s literal and figurative meaning after having given the survey of those concepts i turn to the part of explaining why it is so important to teach figurative language and i do that by drawing on ortony s theses of compactness inexpressibility and vividness furthermore katz s theory of metaphor as politeness is examined and also liu s view on idioms as containing cultural references to end this theoretical paper with an idea of how to use the information practically the last section deals with the question of how figurative language is best taught the methods presented are based on a preceding part of background information on how the comprehension process of figurative language works and what the prerequisites are for being able to learn that part of a foreign language this last part of the paper is mainly based on ortony gentner liu and ur eventually i conclude the paper by summing up the findings and evaluating their relevance for teaching figurative language in second
