Components of a DRA Assessment for Kindergarten:

- Reading Passages: The selected passage should be appropriate for the child's estimated reading level. The passage should be engaging and contain varied vocabulary and sentence structures.
- Oral Reading Fluency: The child reads aloud while the assessor observes their reading fluency, accuracy, and comprehension.
- Retelling: The child retells the story they just read, demonstrating their understanding of the text.
- Questioning: The assessor asks targeted questions about the story, probing the child's comprehension and ability to make inferences.
- Vocabulary: The assessor introduces unfamiliar words from the text, assessing the child's ability to use context clues and determine meaning.
- Emergent Writing: The child may be asked to write a simple sentence or two related to the story, showcasing their emergent writing skills.

Sample Test Passage: This passage is adapted from a typical DRA assessment book.

The cat sat on the mat. He was waiting for the mouse. The mouse ran past the cat but the cat was too slow. The mouse ran to the hole and went inside. The cat was sad. He wanted to eat the mouse.

Questions for Retelling and Comprehension:

- What did the cat do?
- Where did the mouse go?
- Why was the cat sad?

Sample Vocabulary Words: Mat, Slow, Sad.

Ethical Considerations in Early Literacy Assessment: The use of assessments, even those designed to be beneficial, raises ethical concerns. Here are some critical considerations:

- Bias: It's crucial to ensure that assessments are culturally and linguistically sensitive and do not unfairly disadvantage children from diverse backgrounds.
- Overemphasis on Standardized Testing: Overreliance on standardized testing can lead to a narrow focus on test scores and neglect other important aspects of child development.
- Stigmatization and Labeling: Labels based on assessment results can negatively impact a child's self-esteem and future educational opportunities.

Parental

Involvement Parents should be actively involved in understanding the purpose and results of assessments and be given the opportunity to contribute to their child's educational journey

Conclusion The DRA assessment provides a valuable tool for understanding a child's reading development. By embracing a dynamic and interactive approach, it helps educators tailor their instruction to meet individual needs. However, it's essential to use this assessment responsibly, mindful of ethical implications and the broader context of early literacy development. By focusing on the child's learning journey and fostering a positive and supportive environment, educators can use assessment to empower children and guide them towards a lifelong love of reading. 4
