in global trade and social issues leading academics and ngo workers offer a much needed counterweight to the liberal consensus a critical reflection on the whole project of restructuring world trade this is essential reading for those working in international political economy development studies international relations and environmental studies sungjoon cho critiques the conventional contract model of the wto and proposes an alternative notion of community the volume for 1886 contains the proceedings of the conference on temperance legislation london 1886 we use anonymized data from facebook to construct a new measure of the pairwise social connectedness between 180 countries and 332 european regions we find that two countries trade more with each other when they are more socially connected and when they share social connections with a similar set of other countries the social connections that determine trade in each product are those between the regions where the product is produced in the exporting country and those where it is used in the importing country once we control for social connectedness the estimated effect of geographic distance on trade declines substantially and the effect of country borders disappears our findings suggest that social connectedness increases trade by reducing information asymmetries and by providing a substitute for both trust and formal mechanisms of contract enforcement we also present evidence against omitted variables and reverse causality as alternative explanations for the observed relationships between social connectedness and trade flows the inclusion of qualitative social data into global environmental and economic input output io models remained illusive for many years it was not until around 2013 that researchers found ways to include data for example on poverty inequality and worker safety into io models capable of tracing global supply chains the sustainable development goals have now propelled this work onto the world stage with some urgency they have shone a spotlight onto social conditions around the world and brought global trade into the frame for its ability to influence social conditions for good or ill this book provides a compilation of groundbreaking work on social indicators from the most prominent io research groups from a wide range of academic backgrounds and from around the world in addition it frames this work in the real world of politics human rights and business bringing together a multidisciplinary team to demonstrate the power of io to illuminate some of the world s most pressing problems edited by well known researchers in the area joy murray arunima malik and arne geschke the book is designed to appeal to a broad academic and business audience while many chapters include technical details and references for follow up reading it is possible to omit those sections and yet gain a deep appreciation of the power of io to address seemingly intractable problems
