in the early 1600s capt john smith explored the chesapeake bay from jamestown on the eastern shore of maryland he found dozens of small islands including a chain of three islands that later came to be named hoopers island fifty years later when lord baltimore allowed permanent settlement on the eastern shore hoopers island was quickly settled planters came for the island's fertile soil fresh water timber and easy access to the sea oysters and crabs were of little interest however after the civil war more and more hoopers islanders turned to the water to make a living and it is for its seafood that the area is best known in modern times island watermen have been harvesting the bay's treasures for more than a century and sending them to the kitchens of maryland and beyond over the last 400 years hoopers island has lost much of its land to erosion but its culture still retains connections to its past history of the first 100 years of the settlement of hoopers island in dorchester county on maryland's eastern shore based on an event from january 1753 reported in the records of the maryland assembly in which the sheriff charges tobacco planter roger hooper with unpaid quit rents and threatens to seize two of hooper's slaves on a small scale roger hooper and the sheriff is the story of one colonial tidewater family who settled on an island on the east side of the chesapeake bay on a larger canvas through the story of this family one can learn about the development of colonial maryland the difficulties the pioneers experienced their relationship to the indians the importance of tobacco the change to slave labor the deterioration of religious toleration the role of women and finally the economic changes that eventually isolated one side of the bay from the other travel back to hoopers island s beginnings in the 1600s and discover how much different it is today one of the oldest settlements in maryland is a small tidewater community on the eastern shore named hoopers island land was patented there in 1659 and families who owned the original plantations have continued to reside there for generations economic changes in the 18th century contributed to both isolation and a unique style of life by the late 19th century farmers had turned to the sea to make their living and the community became known for its seafood island watermen continue to harvest the products of the chesapeake and local factories deliver seafood daily throughout the region hoopers island today however has a different look than it did even 50 years ago the high school has been transformed into a fine restaurant and an old marine railway has become a modern boatyard and marina while the native population has declined others have retired to the area and the island is becoming a vacation destination
