this paper analyses the UK's approach to identifying and managing threats to the national security of the UK and the implications for these arrangements of a vote for independence it complements analysis of the UK's approach to defence explored elsewhere in the Scotland analysis series it is clearly in the UK's interests to be surrounded by secure and resilient neighbouring countries including in the event of a yes vote an independent Scottish state while the UK endeavours to work with other countries and international organisations to improve security and fight organised crime for everyone's mutual benefit there is something qualitatively different about being influential and intimately connected with the rest of the UK by being a part of it issues of national security are of the utmost sensitivity linked to a country's foreign security and defence policy posture and any decisions are closely related to matters of sovereignty and democratic accountability for this reason a security union is closely connected to the existence of a political union the creation of an independent Scottish state would see an end to the current arrangements for ensuring Scotland's security as Scotland including police Scotland would no longer be part of the UK's national security infrastructure and capabilities in practical terms this means that the present level of strategic and operational communication and co-ordination that occurs everyday across the UK with Scotland playing a key role within it whether concerned with counter terrorism fighting serious and organised crime or protecting against cyber threats would end
