the breadth and depth of these essays are a fitting testimony to the personal and professional interests of James W. Voelz. They span a spectrum from Greek language and lexicography to hermeneutics and translation theory to interpretation and theology of both biblical testaments to contemporary issues in church and world leading scholars with a diversity of interests and in diverse contexts offer a buffet of both general and focused issues from detailed translation theory and method to the world series as a template for theological reflection from creeds and confessions to cultural and social hermeneutics. Readers will find much that will strengthen and challenge their study of theology and the biblical text.

This volume bridges contemporary morphological theory with the less studied aspects of language interference and contact induced variation and change and will serve to increase the reader's understanding of how languages of divergent typologies can affect each other. On the one hand it shows that the study of dialects offers new challenges to contact morphology and on the other it argues that morphological theory may provide accurate and interesting tools for the analysis of dialectal data. In addition it proves that dialectal contact morphology can be profitable for historical linguistics and typology since it may shed light on language change and structures. The book brings together researchers working on morphology, language contact and modern Greek dialects, namely those that have been heavily affected by typologically divergent and sometimes genetically different languages, that is by the Indo-European and semi-fusional Romance languages and by the Altaic and agglutinative Turkish. Emphasis is placed on a number of issues which are of major importance to contact morphology such as the role and interplay of language internal and language external factors in linguistic change, the borrowing of word structure and functional categories, the source and use of integrating elements, reduplication, multiple exponence and case and gender assignment.

two oxen ahead this revealing study of farming practices in societies around the mediterranean draws out the valuable contribution that knowledge of recent practices can make to our understanding of husbandry in prehistoric and greco roman times it reflects increased academic interest in the formative influence of farming regimes on the societies they were designed to feed the author s intensive research took him to farming communities around the mediterranean where he recorded observational and interview data on differing farming strategies and practices many of which can be traced back to classical antiquity or earlier the book documents these variables through the annual chaîne opératoire from ploughing and sowing to harvesting and threshing interannual schemes of crop rotation and husbandry and the generational cycle of household development it traces the interdependence of these successive stages and explores how cultural tradition ecological conditions and access to resources shape variability in husbandry practice each chapter identifies ways in which heuristic use of data on recent farming can shed light on ancient practices and societies
