as dutch merchants became drivers of the transatlantic slavery business in the seventeenth century dutch art increasingly used blackness to signal slavery and servitude in this brilliant and pathbreaking work angela vanhaelen proposes new ways of looking at dutch paintings that do not equate blackness with enslavement vanhaelen reframes the conversation on netherlandish art by placing seventeenth century domestic scenes and portraits in dialogue with images of trading forts markets and plantations in west africa and brazil she argues that dutch paintings depicting enslaved black africans for example frans hals s family group in a landscape not only obscure information about the institution of slavery but fail to capture the resistance and dissent of people who did not conform to the anti black world created by dutch art opacity leads readers to grapple with difficult and complex questions how do we reconcile images of peace and prosperity with the horror of the slave trade how do we teach imagery of black people as enslaved without reinforcing anti black racism can we interpret dehumanizing imagery in ways that consider the complexities of enslavement refusing to view dutch pictures on their own terms opacity recognizes the historical persistence of non sovereign positions anticolonial settlements non patriarchal homeplaces open ended forms of religion and culture as well as the possibilities of oppositional modes of world making this important thought provoking book will be essential reading for students and scholars of black studies and early modern european art history as well as general readers looking for a fresh approach to dutch art of the period
