how social scientists disagreements about their key words and distinctions have been misconceived and what to do about it social scientists do research on a variety of topics gender capitalism populism and race and ethnicity among others they make descriptive and explanatory claims about empathy intelligence neoliberalism and power they advise policymakers on diversity digitalization work and religion and yet as gabriel abend points out in this provocative book they can't agree on what these things are and how to identify them how to tell if something is a religion or a cult or a sect what is empathy what makes this society a capitalist one disputes of this sort arise again and again in the social sciences abend argues that these disagreements have been doubly misconceived first they conflate two questions how a social science community should use its most important words and what distinctions it should accept and work with second there's no fact of the matter about either instead they're practical reason questions for a community which aim at epistemically and morally good outcomes abend calls on social science communities to work together on their words distinctions and classifications they must make collective decisions about the uses of words the acceptability of distinctions and the criteria for assessing both these decisions aren't up to individual scholars the community gets the last word according to abend the common good justice and equality should play a significant role in the logic of scientific research gabriel abend is professor of sociology at university of lucerne and the author of the moral background an inquiry into the history of business ethics princeton
