the author of the bestseller the zero sum society now tells us what we must do to remain a world class economy at a time when other countries have outpaced us in growth productivity and entrepreneurship

this paper considers policies of the industrialized countries as they pertain to crises in emerging markets these fall into three areas 1 their own macroeconomic policies which determine the global financial environment 2 their role in responding to crises when they occur particularly through rescue packages which have three components reforms in debtor countries public funds from creditor countries and private sector involvement and 3 efforts to reform the international financial architecture with the aim of lessening the frequency and severity of future crises a recurrent theme is the tension between mitigating crises that occur and the moral hazard that such efforts create in the longer term in addition to reviewing these three areas of policy we consider the institutions through which the more powerful countries exercise their influence we conclude with a discussion of the debate over the sins of the international monetary fund and proposals for reform this paper describes a class of stochastic stabilizing policies within asset price regimes that can be easily incorporated into the framework of regime switching recently proposed by froot and obfstfeld 1991 in contrast to previous treatments of market driven fundamentals within the regime authorities stochastically counteract movements in these fundamentals before asset prices reach boundary points the paper describes how the stabilizing intra regime intervention policies can be used to characterize the behavior of monetary authorities before fixing an exchange rate as in the case studied by flood and garber 1983 an intervention policy within target zone bands consistent with empirical evidence is also a member of this class of policies furthermore the stylized features of these intervention policies may be matched to actual data in a natural way
