seminar paper from the year 2009 in the subject english language and literature studies linguistics grade a university of wales bangor course phonology language english abstract in many languages word stress is quite predictable in czech the first syllable of a word always carries the main stress in french the ultimate syllable is the most prominent each time the penultimate syllable is constantly stressed in polish as can be seen there are strict general rules with respect to a word's stress in english however the stressing of a lexeme appears to be arbitrary rather than following certain stress rules the spelling does not indicate a word's pronunciation let alone its stress moreover the stress may even differ within the same word thus thir teen can be stressed on the last syllable but in an environment of another word e.g. thirteen pints it can also be pronounced with a prominent first syllable in order to keep eurhythmy nevertheless it looks like native speakers have a perceptual ability to say how many syllables a word has and to tell which syllable receives the most stress therefore carr 1999 considers three trisyllabic non english words gigondas zaventem and tavola the author points out that english speakers always tend to stress the penultimate syllable mispronouncing each of theses words why do speakers with english as their mother tongue react in this way is this a proof of generalisation and existing stress patterns in this essay it is discussed whether the primary stress of singular words has to be learned e g like their spelling or the sequence of their phonemes or if the stressing of a lexeme follows internalized rules due to a lack of space secondary stress shall be excluded here for a more concise analysis of the issue three main bases concerning primary stress patterns are examined the syntactic morphological and phonological information of a word
