in much writing on language change there is a tacit assumption that change operates on a single source construction to produce an innovative target construction this volume challenges this assumption by showing that many changes involve interactions between multiple source constructions in fact the involvement of multiple source constructions is unexceptional the phenomenon is observed in phonology morphology syntax and semantics it is seen in language internal change as well as in contact induced change interactions may obtain between independent but historically related constructions as well as between historically unrelated constructions the contributions to this volume on the one hand present specific case studies on changes involving multiple source constructions in various domains of grammar and in a variety of languages on the other hand they discuss how such changes can be accommodated in current theoretical models of language originally published in studies in language vol 37 3 2013

the celtic languages and groups called keltoi i e celts emerge into our written records at the pre roman iron age the impetus for this book is to explore from the perspectives of three disciplines archaeology genetics and linguistics the background in later european prehistory to these developments there is a traditional scenario according to which celtic speech and the associated group identity came in to being during the early iron age in the north alpine zone and then rapidly spread across central and western europe this idea of celtogenesis remains deeply entrenched in scholarly and popular thought but it has become increasingly difficult to reconcile with recent discoveries pointing towards origins in the deeper past it should no longer be taken for granted that atlantic europe during the 2nd and 3rd millennia bc were pre celtic or even pre indo european the explorations in celtic from the west 3 are drawn together in this spirit continuing two earlier volumes in the influential series this volume examines the scandinavian impact on england in the ninth and tenth centuries with particular reference to scandinavian settlement and the diverse ways in which the scandinavians and the native populations responded to each other many previous studies have described the settlement as involving a rapid assimilation of the settlers with native society and culture and a swift process of integration this volume challenges that view and shows that the processes of assimilation integration and accommodation were gradual and complex displaying important regional variations where did the scandinavians come from what type of society did they eventually settle into what were the implications of the drawing of different cultures in contact and how is this portrayed in the surviving material an important aim of this volume is to open up new interdisciplinary dialogue in viking studies and it analyses documentary archaeological artefactual and linguistic evidence the volume also seeks to develop more theoretically sophisticated accounts of scandinavian settlement and brings the study of this subject up to date in terms of developments in other branches of history archaeology and linguistics recent discussion in other fields concerning for example material culture and language have shown that they did not simply reflect changes in society but were also active constituent elements in creating and re creating social and cultural identities the volume focuses on the creation of local and regional identities and affinities and moves on from the traditional depiction of the issues in terms of a simple dichotomy of scandinavian and english it takes a more rigorously contextual approach than has hitherto been the case in the study of scandinavian settlement and seeks to throw new light on the consequences of cultures in contact
