the trouble with management education says author Henry Mintzberg is that it is business education and leaves a distorted impression of management in managers not MBAs. He offers a new definition of management as a blend of craft, experience, art, insight, and science. Analysis, an education that overemphasizes science, encourages a style of managing the author calls calculating. Or if the graduates believe themselves to be artists, the related style is heroic. According to the book, neither heroes nor technocrats in positions of influence are useful. What's really needed are balanced, dedicated people who practice a style that can be called engaging. Such people believe their purpose is to leave behind stronger organizations, not just higher share prices. Managers Not MBAs explains in detail how to cultivate such managers and how they can transform the business world and ultimately society.
