essays reflecting on our understanding and moral judgement of violence the essays argue that even serious violence is not a simple fact but a category of thought and practice rooted in history culture and society violence culture and censure consists of a series of original and challenging essays reflecting upon the understanding and moral judgement of violence in the twentieth century it shows that even serious violence is not a simple behavioural fact speaking for itself but a category of thought and practice deeply rooted in history culture and society representing contemporary theoretical developments within sociological criminology this book suggests that the twentieth century has thrown so much philosophical doubt over the idea that violence is unequivocally and always bad behaviour that the issue for many now concerns what violence means the book is thus at the interface between sociology and cultural studies taking a range of examples the authors illustrate the difficulties in defining and explaining violence outside of a theory of the censures which either inspire it or describe it and thus the value of understanding its relation to cultural and historical context they illustrate the uncomfortable proximity between practices of censored violence and the censorious violence of law and order this dialectical theme is evidenced by studies of violence in areas of much contemporary interest including sadomasochism the holocaust latin american dictatorships the punishment of blacks in the usa the content of tarantino films and the philosophy of violence there are good reasons to look at violence from new perspectives in its endless manifestations violence is part and parcel of human existence and is very probably a constituting element of human society and yet violent action warfare penalties insults feuding assault murder rape suicide sports remains in all its complexity one of the least understood fields of human social life the book s contributors identify the symbolic and ritualized aspects of violence and suggest ways of reading violence as it occurs in the world whether as violent duelling and age group violence in southern ethiopia bullfighting in iberia cattle rustling in kenya guerrilla and militia wars in colombia or public executions in china these case studies suggest that violence is not a simple universal urge but is contingent and context dependent shaped by social relations of power force and dominance to be the victim of violence is a humiliating and frightening experience but the many ambiguities that occur in the use of violence must be considered to understand why peace seems only to exist as a contrast to the violation of peace
