there is no single way in which children learn to communicate each child follows an individual developmental pattern just as you did still it is possible to describe a pattern of general communication development and of english specifically this text attempts such descriptions and generalizations but emphasizes individual patterns too the anecdotal view of language acquisition is that children learn language with apparent ease no instruction and in very little time while adults find learning a new language to be cognitively challenging labour intensive and time consuming in this book herschensohn examines whether early childhood is a critical period for language acquisition after which individuals cannot learn a language as native speakers she argues that a first language is largely susceptible to age constraints showing major deficits past the age of twelve second language acquisition also shows age effects but with a range of individual differences the competence of expert adult learners the unequal achievements of child learners of second languages and the lack of consistent evidence for a maturational cut off all cast doubt on a critical period for second language acquisition in recent years there has been increasing interest in the english used in singapore and malaysia including how children in these two countries acquire the languages used around them particularly on their acquisition of english this book is the first attempt to bring together studies on various aspects of this subject done by academics from the two countries it begins with two background papers on the linguistic situation in singapore and malaysia followed by studies of the cognitive development of children as it relates to language development the third and fourth sections of the book contain papers dealing variously with the sociolinguistic and psycholinguistic aspects of language use with important implications on language learning and teaching in a multilingual context
