the prevailing view of industrialization has focussed on technology capital entrepreneurship and the institutions that enabled them to be deployed labour was often equated with other factors of production and assigned a relatively passive role yet it was labour absorption and the improvement of the quality of labour over the course of several centuries that underscored the timing pace and quality of global industrialization while science and technology developed in the west and whereas the use of fossil fuels especially coal and oil were vital to this process the more recent history has been underpinned by the development of comparatively resource and energy saving technology without which the diffusion of industrialization would not have been possible the labour intensive resource saving path which emerged in east asia under the influence of western technology and institutions and is diffusing across the world suggests the most realistic route humans could take for a further diffusion of industrialization which might respond to the rising expectations of living standards without catastrophic environmental degradation first published in 1980 this book is a study of what different classes of society understood by leisure and how they enjoyed it it argues that many of the assumptions which have underlain the history of leisure are misleading and in particular the notions that there was a vacuum in popular leisure in the early industrial revolution that with industrialisation there was sharp discontinuity with the past that cultural forms diffuse themselves only down the social scale and that leisure helped ease class distinctions an alternative interpretation is suggested in which popular culture can be seen as an active agent as well as a victim this title will be of interest to students of history
