This book extends traditional language arts content by offering multiple communicative channels for expressing representing and responding to ideas. The book equips teachers with ways to maximize children's creative potential and critical literacy through activities involving the arts: visual arts, music, dance, drama, and film, including video, TV, and computer technology. The author provides thorough coverage of literacy products, process, strategies, procedures, and resources not typically found in language arts texts. All of the literacy tasks presented, which fit into Howard Gardner's framework of multiple intelligences, recognize children's different abilities, talents, needs, learning styles, interests, and cultural background.

In a long and distinguished career Eisner has given eloquent voice to the concerns of those who decry the marginalization of the arts in school curriculums. Now for the first time ever, readers will have access to his best essays in one concise volume.

The primary purpose of higher education is the cultivation of intellect for its own sake, not a preparation for a specialized job market. This book contends that most universities today are failing to fulfill this purpose since they have instituted the kind of academic programs, policies, and practices that have actually subverted intellectual life and literacy in academia. Perhaps to a point of no return. In this expose of some of the sacred cows of academia, the author examines several disturbing trends eroding the spirit of higher education, including the degrading impact of the bureaucratic mind set on education and scholarship, the demise of an intellectual climate in academic institutions, the decline of intellectual literacy in post-secondary education, dangers to intellect from specialisms, technology, and post-modern ideologies, detrimental effects of the flight from teaching, and the teaching evaluation fad, and the
