the 165 nhs acute and foundation hospital trusts in england spend over 4.6 billion a year on the procurement of medical supplies and other types of consumable goods. Each trust controls its own purchasing and can purchase consumables in various ways: dealing direct with suppliers through the national supplies organisation, nhs supply chain or via the regional collaborative procurement hubs. They can also choose to join other trusts in collaborative purchasing arrangements for particular localities or types of supplies. The department sees the future for nhs procurement as a pyramid structure with national, regional and local procurement of different types of goods as appropriate to the products and the supplier markets. However, this theoretical model does not reflect the current complex reality with a profusion of bodies involved in the procurement process. Its effectiveness is open to question in the emerging landscape where foundation trusts act independently with no explicit incentive to co-operate. The fragmented system of procurement has produced a great deal of waste with trusts being charged different prices for the same goods, ordering in inefficient ways and failing to control the range of products which they purchase. The nao has estimated that trusts could save around 500 million annually 10% of their consumables expenditure by amalgamating small orders into larger, less frequent ones, rationalising and standardising product choices and striking committed volume deals across multiple trusts. A lack of data has limited progress towards more efficient procurement and there has not been sufficient control over procurement practices.

the public sector in england spends around 2 billion per year on food and catering services. This nao report contains three case studies which examine how public sector organisations can improve their food procurement practices in order to reduce costs whilst maintaining the quality of meals provided. The case studies cover three of the four largest expenditure areas relating to the provision of food in schools, hospitals and armed forces bases, and each case study examines the role played by organisations at different levels in the delivery chain, from department level down to frontline delivery. Two accompanying documents are available separately: the main report hcp 963 i isbn 0102937427 and a good practice guide hcp 963 iii isbn 0102937443.

a combination of inadequate information and fragmented purchasing means that nhs hospitals' procurement of consumables is poor value for money. The nao estimates that at least 500 million a year could be saved by the nhs on its spending on consumables and potentially much more for some products with no central control over foundation trusts. The department of health cannot mandate more efficient procurement practices; responsibility to demonstrate value for money in procurement falls upon the management of individual trusts. The price that trusts pay for the same items varies widely: the average variation between the highest and lowest unit price paid was 10 per cent some trusts are not getting value for money because they are buying many different types of the same product for example trusts bought 21 different types of a4 paper 652 types of medical gloves and 1 751 different cannulas there is also a large variation between trusts one bought 13 different types of glove whilst another bought 177 different types there are unnecessary administrative costs because many trusts make multiple small purchase orders hospital trusts have complete freedom in purchasing decisions and can use regional procurement hubs the nhs supply chain or they can buy direct from suppliers evidence suggests that new contracts are being established which overlap and duplicate each other there is no national performance framework for hubs which would enable comparisons to be drawn between them or to allow an assessment of their potential optimal performance
