this dissertation elaborates differences and similarities of forms of ethical behaviour in general and analyses whether german consumers differentiate between different types of ethical behaviour in particular the thesis is characterised by its intensive combination of theoretical and empirical research it furthermore contributes to the literature as the method triangulation applied in the different surveys reveals previously unknown relationships between different kinds of ethical behaviour such as ethical consumption and charitable giving as well as between different forms of ethical products choice experiment latent class analysis information display matrix and item based attitude assessment allowed the comparison of stated and revealed preferences as well as an analysis of the relevance of ethical product features within the context of different product and process attributes the dissertation provides insights into a research field which is becoming more and more relevant and improves the understanding of consumers assessment and the interdependencies of the possibilities of ethical behaviour this allows the development of recommendations for consumer policy makers business and ngos concerned with the ethics of consumer choice as well as future research on ethical behaviour in general and ethical consumption in particular in negotiating rationally max bazerman and margaret neale explain how to avoid the pitfalls of irrationality and gain the upper hand in negotiations for example managers tend to be overconfident to recklessly escalate previous commitments and fail to consider the tactics of the other party drawing on their research the authors show how we are prisoners of our own assumptions they identify strategies to avoid these pitfalls in negotiating by concentrating on opponents behavior and developing the ability to recognize individual limitations and biases they explain how to think rationally about the choice of reaching an agreement versus reaching an impasse a must read for business professionals in politics ideas matter they provide the foundation for economic policymaking which in turn shapes what is possible in domestic and international politics yet until now little attention has been paid to how these ideas are produced and disseminated and how this process varies between countries the national origins of policy ideas provides the first comparative analysis of how knowledge regimes communities of policy research organizations like think tanks political party foundations ad hoc commissions and state research offices and the institutions that govern them generate ideas and communicate them to policymakers john campbell and ovedersen examine how knowledge regimes are organized operate and have changed over the last thirty years in the united states france germany and denmark they show how there are persistent national differences in how policy ideas are produced some countries do so in contentious politically partisan ways while others are cooperative and consensus oriented they find that while knowledge regimes have adopted some common practices since the 1970s tendencies toward convergence have been limited and outcomes have been heavily shaped by national contexts drawing on extensive interviews with top officials at leading policy research organizations this book demonstrates why knowledge regimes are as important to capitalism as the state and the firm and sheds new light on debates about the effects of globalization the rise of neoliberalism and the orientation of comparative political economy in political science and sociology
