this book examines the contested representations of those murdered during the Spanish Civil War of the 1930s in two small rural communities as they undergo the experience of exhumation, identification and reburial from nearby mass graves based on interviews with relatives of the dead, community members and forensic archaeologists. It pays close attention to the role of excavated objects and images in breaking the pact of silence that surrounded the memory of these painful events for decades afterward. It also assesses the significance of archaeological and forensic practices in changing relationships between the living and the dead. The exposure of graves has opened up a discursive space in Spanish society for multiple representations to be made of the war dead and of Spain's traumatic past.

The Franciscan Subduction Complex formed a long-lived accretionary wedge of Late Jurassic through Oligocene age that fringed the western edge of the North American Cordillera. This volume summarizes absolute finite strain data from the Franciscan Subduction Complex and brittle strain data from important faults in and above this complex because the Franciscan is generally considered a prototypical sediment-rich subduction complex. Its tectonic evolution is important for understanding convergent plate margins and the results outlined in this volume may have broad implications for other subduction zone settings. Pub Desc.

This book reflects on the new histories emerging from the exhumation of mass graves that contain the corpses of the Republicans killed in extrajudicial executions during and after the conflict nearly eighty years after the end of the Spanish Civil War (1936-1939). In the search for location and unearthing of these unmarked burials, the corpse, the document and the oral testimony have become key traces through which to demand the recognition of past Francoist crimes which were never atoned for. From a lukewarm Spanish state and judiciary, these have become objects of evidence against the politics of silence entertained by national institutions since the transition to democracy. Working alongside archaeologists, historians, memory activists and families, this book explores how new versions of the history of the killings are constructed at the crossroads between science, history and family experience. It does so considering the workings of truth seeking in the absence of criminal justice and the effects of the process on Spanish collective memory and identity.

This 10 chapter volume encompasses contributions from a wide spectrum of earth science disciplines including geophysics, geodynamics, geochemistry and petrology to provide an overview of the nature and evolution of the crust, mantle and lithosphere, asthenosphere boundaries in different tectonic settings combining studies that exploit different types of data and interpretative approaches. The integration of geochemical, geophysical and geodynamic data sets and their interpretation provides a state of the art summary of current understanding and will serve as a blueprint for future research activities.
