the aim of this book is to explain the post war growth of the public sector in a number of developed economies the purpose is to see whether scientists familiar with their respective countries institutional political and economic framework but still working as a group can advance some common factors behind the growth of government this thesis examines three environmental issues in developing countries the first essay examines land fires in indonesia that inflict severe air pollution related damage on southeast asia annually conservative estimates of losses in 1997 alone were us 667 million for indonesia 0.67 of gdp and an additional us 12 million for singapore fire incidence on various landholdings is examined using a new author compiled database on satellite based fire and rainfall data land use maps socioeconomic and geographical information the essay finds that estates large scale industrial plantations that are rapidly expanding in the tropics raise fire incidence beyond the natural level the fire incidence on conservation areas serves as a benchmark in contrast it finds no evidence that small landholdings which are often blamed for fires raise fire incidence the government's ban on the use of clearance fires as a result of weak enforcement did not reduce fire incidence on estates alternative policy levers that could potentially reduce these fires such as lengthening the estates leases to improve their property security are found to be ineffective the second essay examines whether education can potentially reduce households agricultural related forest clearance by increasing the returns to wage labor it analyzes a unique survey of 649 indigenous households in protected areas in bolivia's lowland forests it finds that an additional year of education among household heads is associated with a reduction of 0.05 hectares or 4.3% of the annual mean household forest clearance increased returns of 2.6% in wage labor and a 21% increase in days worked in wage labor thus the 3 year average increase in education among the youngest cohorts is associated with potentially significant reduction in forest clearance in the study site though further work is needed to establish causality the third essay examines the pollution intensity of the nafta related expansion in usmexican trade using new detailed measures of air water metal and toxic pollution intensities and injury rates at the 4 digit standard industrial classification level based on pollution measures at this resolution it does not find strong evidence of greater growth in the share of us net imports from mexico in the more polluting or injurious industries beginning in 1985 one section is devoted to a special topic this paper analyzes the roots of variation in de facto institutions within a constant de jure institutional setting we explore the role of rent seeking episodes in colonial brazil as determinants of the quality of current local institutions and argue that this variation reveals a de facto dimension of institutional quality we show that municipalities with origins tracing back to the sugar cane colonial cycle characterized by a polarized and oligarchic socioeconomic structure display today more inequality in the distribution of land municipalities with origins tracing back to the gold colonial cycle characterized by an over bureaucratic and heavily intervening presence of the portuguese state display today worse governance practices and less access to justice the colonial rent seeking episodes are also correlated with lower provision of public goods and lower income per capita today and the latter correlation seems to work partly through worse institutional quality at the local level culture has increasingly been linked to a diverse range of individuals and organizational behaviours this book offers critical discussion and information on the topic it reviews the theoretical and methodological issues and problems and considers future research directions
