the presence of potential immunologically competent cells in the various tissues of embryonic newborn and adult mice was demonstrated by means of a modified graft vs host method and by the injection of chromosomally marked cells into irradiated recipients the results indicate that lymphoid stem cells which have the potential to participate in cell bound immune reactions appear in the placenta and liver by the 9th or 10th day of gestation throughout pregnancy they are found in the liver during the 11th to 14th days of gestation these stem cells are present in the upper trunk or in the thymus on about the 15th day they appear in the lung and toward the end of the pregnancy in the fetal bone marrow and spleen there was little or no evidence of the presence of lymphoid precursors capable of maturation to cells which mediate cell bound immune responses in the gut prior to birth following parturition lymphoid stem cells were present in the liver peyer's patches lung bone marrow lymph nodes spleen blood and thymus however by six weeks after birth the bone marrow appeared to be the major or sole source of these cells certain of the data suggest that immunoglobulin producing cells as opposed to those which mediate cell bound immunity may arise in the yolk sac on the 9th or 10th day of gestation further these immunoglobulin producing cells may reside in the gut as a relatively pure cell population after the 16th day of gestation author the 78th symposium covers many aspects of the immune system including the genetics biochemistry molecular and cell biology and developmental biology of immune responses fundamental biological insights are described as well as new approaches intended to harness the immune system to treat disease particularly cancer the topics addressed in this volume include the protective effect of commensal bacteria the diverse immune mechanisms underlying chronic infection or immune control in hiv and tuberculosis and insights into autoimmune diseases that may lead to new clinical therapies this book discusses the evolutionary origin of immunoglobulins and t cell receptors the complex interactions between b and t cells in response to external antigens are the major focus of contemporary immunology this book argues that these interactions may be relatively late evolutionary developments due to the redeployment of a system invented for other reasons in other words immunoglobulins did not arise in evolution to fight infection the author theorizes that the system of variable region moleculars vrm arose at the time of the first vertebrates by an endogenous self organizing process this primordial vrm system instituted a molecular ecology a function so vital that from then on no vertebrate has been able to do without it
