while existential issues perhaps concern people the most today s education is not as preoccupied with such issues instead education is becoming more uniform and streamlined more and more one sidedly directed towards what is useful the purpose of this book is to focus on education s existential dimension such a focus requires at least three things firstly we need to justify why it is necessary to reconnect with existentialism in education secondly we need to undergo an examination of the quality of existential education so that we can have a basis as to what kind of educational interests teachers should have thirdly we need to gain knowledge about how teachers may teach in light of existential matters however to teach in light of existence is highly paradoxical in that existence cannot be forced on someone but is rather a subjective matter teaching which is non ironical or too direct can thus be very problematic concerning existential issues the reason being that there is no objective truth in terms of existence there is only a matter of subjective or existential truth which is only true for the single individual therefore the book suggests that the approach teachers take must be discrete and indirect so as to create room for students to take responsibility for their subjective truth such an indirect pedagogy is not a programme but rather a form of existential education the overall aim of the book is by way of introducing and developing the concept of indirect pedagogy to extend and reinvent the language of teaching in the late 1930s a number of american women especially those allied with various peace and isolationist groups protested against the nation s entry into world war ii while their story is fairly well known margaret paton walsh reveals a far less familiar story of women who fervently felt that american intervention was absolutely necessary paton walsh recounts how the united states became involved in the war but does so through the eyes of american women who faced it as a necessary evil covering the period between 1935 and 1941 she examines how these women functioned as political actors even though they were excluded from positions of power through activism in women s organizations informal women s networks and even male dominated lobbying groups in the great debate over whether america should enter the war some women favored aid to the allies not because they hoped for war but because they hoped aid would forestall more direct u s involvement but also because they believed war was preferable to a nazi victory paton walsh shows that this activism involved some of the most prominent women of their day elizabeth cutter morrow whose son in law charles lindbergh was an isolationist spokesman supported the revision of the neutrality acts to allow the sale of arms to the allies and expressed her support in a national radio broadcast soon other women joined this debate esther brunauer of the aaup journalist dorothy thompson and organizations like the league of women voters and national women s trade union league broke from the pacifist tradition to advocate american aid for the allied cause focusing on the conflict in europe paton walsh shows how these women grasped the implications of the lend lease program for america s entry into the war but supported it nevertheless by late 1941 the women s division of the fight for freedom committee had been established no longer merely advocating aid to britain to keep american boys out of battle this organization supported direct american involvement in the war as a means of stopping nazi oppression while most historians have focused on women s pacifism paton walsh connects women more directly to world events and shows how those interventionists reformulated maternalist ideas to justify and explain their beliefs our war too is a story of american women trying to reconcile the irreconcilable to preserve both their principles and their peace it expands our understanding of women as political actors and thinkers about foreign policy as it sheds new light on american public opinion over the build up to the war
