for the first time proper names are made the topic of a cross linguistic account of morphosyntactic properties which formally distinguish place names personal names and common nouns it is shown that the behaviour of place names and personal names in morphology and syntax frequently disagrees with the rules established for other word classes independent of the language s genetic affiliation grammatical structure and geographic location place names and personal names each boast a grammar of their own they are candidates for the status of a distinct word class their special grammar comes frequently to the fore in the domain of spatial and possessive relations this fact is explained with reference to functional notions

this book is a functional typological study of possession splits in european languages it shows that genetically and structurally diverse languages such as icelandic welsh and maltese display possessive systems which are sensitive to semantically based distinctions reminiscent of the alienability correlation these distinctions are grammatically relevant in many european languages because they require dedicated constructions what makes these split possessive systems interesting for the linguist is the interaction of semantic criteria with pragmatics and syntax neutralisation of distinctions occurs under focus the same happens if one of the constituents of a possessive construction is syntactically heavy these effects can be observed in the majority of the 50 sample languages possessive splits are strong in those languages which are outside the standard average european group the bulk of the european languages do not behave much differently from those non european languages for which possession splits are reported the book reveals interesting new facts about european languages and possession to typologists universals researchers and areal linguists this in depth areal typological study analyzes the grammatical means which are employed in the languages of europe to express the comparative of inequality superiority the extant theories and hypotheses about the morphosyntactic structure and the cross linguistic distribution of construction types are reviewed the behavior of comparatives under the conditions of language contact is discussed data from more than 170 standard and nonstandard varieties of european languages are scrutinized systematically the synchronic picture is complemented by a chapter on the diachrony of comparative constructions the european facts are compared to those of the geographically adjacent asian and african regions it is argued that cross linguistic investigations must take account also of so called secondary options these secondary options suggest strongly that the supposedly dominant role of the particle comparative cannot be upheld for europe moreover only the secondary options allow us to draw isoglosses which cross the borders between europe and asia and africa translating picturebooks examines the role of illustration in the translation process of picturebooks and how the word image interplay inherent in the medium can have an impact both on translation practice and the reading process itself the book draws on a wide range of picturebooks published and translated in a number of languages to demonstrate the myriad ways in which information and meaning is conveyed in the translation of multimodal material and in turn the impact of these interactions on the readers experiences of these books the volume also analyzes strategies translators employ in translating picturebooks including issues surrounding culturally specific references and visual and verbal gaps and features a chapter with excerpts from translators diaries written during the process highlighting the complex dynamics at work in the translation process of picturebooks and their implications for research on translation studies and multimodal material this book is an indispensable resource for students and researchers in translation studies multimodality and children s literature
