sometimes you have to lose everything to find where you truly belong eighteen year old paige mason's problems aren't ordinary not anymore after the cluster of suicides at her silicon valley high school everything changed all her bright plans of attending a fancy private college finding a solid group of girlfriends falling in love everything faded to ashes in order to feel something in the face of numb dulling pain she made bad choices dangerous choices and now that she's been shipped back to her sick father's dilapidated wyoming ranch paige has a choice piece together the jagged edges of her past or give up a potentially incredible future with jake the cowboy she can't stay away from no matter how hard she tries

we contrast the spatial mismatch hypothesis with what we term the racial mismatch hypothesis that the problem is not a lack of jobs per se where blacks live but a lack of jobs into which blacks are hired whether because of discrimination or labor market networks in which race matters we first report new evidence on the spatial mismatch hypothesis using data from census long form respondents we construct direct measures of the presence of jobs in detailed geographic areas and find that these job density measures are related to employment of black male residents in ways that would be predicted by the spatial mismatch hypothesis in particular that spatial mismatch is primarily an issue for low skilled black male workers we then look at racial mismatch by estimating the effects of job density measures that are disaggregated by race we find that it is primarily black job density that influences black male employment whereas white job density has little if any influence on their employment this evidence implies that space alone plays a relatively minor role in low black male employment rates
