learning to read and to spell are two of the most important cultural skills that must be acquired by children and for that matter anyone learning a second language we are not born with an innate ability to read a reading system of mental representations that enables us to read must be formed in the brain learning to read in alphabetic orthographies is the acquisition of such a system which links mental representations of visual symbols letters in print words with pre existing phonological sound and semantic comprehension cognitive systems for language although spelling draws on the same representational knowledge base and is usually correlated with reading the acquisition processes involved are not quite the same spelling requires the sequential production of letters in words and at beginning levels there may not be a full degree of integration of phonology with its representation by the orthography reading on the other hand requires only the recognition of a word for pronunciation hence spelling is more difficult than reading and learning to spell may necessitate more complete representations or more conscious access to them the learning processes that children use to acquire such cognitive systems in the brain and whether these same processes are universal across different languages and orthographies are central theoretical questions most children learn to read and spell their language at the same time thus the co ordination of these two facets of literacy acquisition needs explication as well as the effect of different teaching approaches on acquisition lack of progress in either reading and or spelling is also a major issue of concern for parents and teachers necessitating a cross disciplinary approach to the problem encompassing major efforts from researchers in neuroscience cognitive science experimental psychology and education the purpose of this research topic is to summarize and review what has been accomplished so far and to further explore these general issues contributions from different perspectives are welcomed and could include theoretical computational and empirical works that focus on the acquisition of literacy including cross orthographic research the last indian war was fought against native american children in the dormitories and classrooms of government boarding schools only by removing indian children from their homes for extended periods of time policymakers reasoned could white civilization take root while childhood memories of savagism gradually faded to the point of extinction in the words of one official kill the indian and save the man education for extinction offers the first comprehensive account of this dispiriting effort much more than a study of federal indian policy this book vividly details the day to day experiences of indian youth living in a total institution designed to reconstruct them both psychologically and culturally the assault on identity came in many forms the shearing off of braids the assignment of new names uniformed drill routines humiliating punishments relentless attacks on native religious beliefs patriotic indoctrinations suppression of tribal languages victorian gender rituals football contests and industrial training especially poignant is adams s description of the ways in which students resisted or accommodated themselves to forced assimilation many converted to varying degrees but others plotted escapes committed arson and devised ingenious strategies of passive resistance adams also argues that many of those who seemingly cooperated with the system were more than passive players in this drama that the response of accommodation was not synonymous with cultural surrender this is especially apparent in his analysis of students who returned to the reservation he reveals the various ways in which graduates struggled to make sense of their lives and selectively drew upon their school experience in negotiating personal and tribal survival in a world increasingly dominated by white men the discussion comes full circle when adams reviews the government s gradual retreat from the assimilationist vision partly because of persistent student resistance but also partly because of a complex and sometimes contradictory set of progressive humanitarian and racist motivations policymakers did eventually come to view boarding schools less enthusiastically based upon extensive use of government archives indian and teacher autobiographies and school newspapers adams s moving account is essential reading for scholars and general readers alike interested in western history native american studies american race relations education history and multiculturalism life is filled with valuable lessons but none more valuable than those shared from generation to generation this book is a compilation of sometimes moving sometimes poignant always meaningful messages written by parents for their children each aims to inspire encourage and enlighten those they love the most in the world and give them a lasting gift that will carry them through all the great moments of their lives from inevitable heartache to the wonders of a life filled with joy and beyond each serves as a guidepost to help the next generation meet life s challenges and continue to grow into kind wonderful giving individuals whom know their worth and aspire for greatness despite the obstacles placed in front of them this heartwarming collection also features a section for readers where they can craft their own letter to leave a lasting legacy for someone they hold dear all proceeds will be donated to cancer charities city of hope children
