the native speaker is one of the central but at the same time most controversial concepts of modern linguistics with regard to english it became especially controversial with the rise of the so called new englishes where reality is much more complex than the neat distinction into native and non native speakers would make us believe this volume reconstructs the coming into being of the english native speaker in the second half of the nineteenth century in order to probe into the origins of the problems surrounding the concept today a corpus of texts which includes not only the classics of the nineteenth century linguistic literature but also numerous lesser known articles from periodical journals of the time is investigated by means of historical discourse analysis in order to retrace the production and reproduction of this particularly important linguistic ideology many job advertisements seeking teachers of english to work in japan china south korea and thailand for instance specify that they are looking for native speaking teachers from usa uk australia and new zealand they do not seem to be interested even in trained non native speaking teachers from their own countries this situation also exists in many other countries where there is a clear preference for native speaking teachers this paper discusses the characteristics according to scholars in language acquisition that a native speaker possesses and how non native speaker teachers who vastly outnumber the native speakers can aspire to approximate to the notion of nativeness in language output even though the concept of a native speaker for that of english has become somewhat subjective due to its globalized role there are some basics that define a native speaker a non native speaker is generally one who does not speak a particular language as his her first language
