a memoir of life and death on the burma thailand railway four and a half days after being transported out of singapore in a steel goods train in october 1942 prisoner of war denys peek found himself in siam and a part of the labour force destined for the project that was later to be known as the thai burma death railway together with his brother ron and contingents from the australian and british armies and volunteer units among others denys spent the duration of the war in over fifteen different work and hospital camps on the railway where over 20 000 prisoners of war and uncounted slave labourers met their deaths from june 1942 to october 1943 more than 100 000 allied pows who had been forced into slave labor by the japanese died building the infamous burma thailand death railway an undertaking immortalized in the film the bridge on the river kwai one of the few who survived was american marine h robert charles who describes the ordeal in vivid and harrowing detail in last man out the story mixes the unimaginable brutality of the camps with the inspiring courage of the men including a dutch colonial army doctor whose skill and knowledge of the medicinal value of wild jungle herbs saved the lives of hundreds of his fellow pows including the author generosity amid the greatest cruelty building the death railway gives the american perspective on events that shocked the world the death railway was very well named more correctly called the burma or thai burma railway it was a major project during allied far east imprisonment under the japanese over 60 000 prisoners worked on its construction the majority of whom were british and some 20 per cent died before release in 1945 working conditions were appalling the climate inhospitable and food supplies grossly inadequate making the pows terribly vulnerable to a plethora of tropical infections and syndromes of malnutrition no medical care was given by their japanese captors and it fell to the allied pow doctors and medical orderlies to treat the sick which they did with little in the way of medical equipment or drugs by the laws of statistics john lowry should not be here today to tell his story he firmly believes that someone somewhere was looking after him during those four years examine the odds stacked against him and his readers will understand why he hold this view during the conflict in malaya and singapore his regiment lost two thirds of its men more than three hundred patients and staff in the alexandra military hospital were slaughtered by the japanese he was the only known survivor twenty six percent of british soldiers slaving on the burma railway died more than fifty men out of around six hundred died aboard the aaska maru and the hakasan maru many more did not manage to survive the harshest japanese winter of 1944 45 the coldest in japan since record began johns experiences make for the most compelling and graphic reading the courage endurance and resilience of men like him never ceases to amaze allied pows experienced inhumane treatment and endured torture by japanese forces not only were the long days of the pows filled with harsh labor and punctuated by physical abuse but also the prisoners were provided with grossly inadequate food the daily food allotment typically included small portions of boiled rice and spoiled meat or fish rations were routinely contaminated with rat droppings and infested with maggots in addition there was a lack of potable water consequently the prisoners were malnourished dehydrated and predisposed to illness these factors compounded by the unsanitary conditions in the work camps and the tropical environment meant that disease was rampant dysentery and diarrhea were responsible for more than one third of all deaths on the railway other diseases included cholera malaria and tropical ulcers for anyone seeking information on the daily life of an ordinary british soldier as a pow of the japanese in ww2 working on the burma siam railway this is the right place for you
