traditional or contemporary transcending the worship wars whaley focuses on the core the biblical nature of worship excellent for perplexed church leaders and laypeople background church services today incorporate a wide variety of worship music stylistically and lyrically depending on the congregation some churches place great importance on the gospel being included in the songs while others focus more on the emotions felt during the songs while there are churches that maintain an eclectic mix of the two other churches have a significant imbalance in the worship songs they choose to sing each week matt boswell says every worship experience in its order and content is an expression of the congregation's liturgy it communicates something about your church your doctrine and the order of your priorities 1 as the local church gathers there must be a clearer knowledge of why mankind has been created to worship as well as god's design for worship both corporately and individually the church gathers to worship vertically personally and horizontally statement of the purpose there has been much deliberation on what songs are best for worship within the church over the last few decades personal preference and not the word of god seems to motivate song selection scott connell warns that song choice should not be based upon popularity preference or pressure 2 the purpose of this research paper is to explore god's design for worship songs within the local church and provide detailed biblical guidance on worship with god scholarly wisdom the word of god and church service evaluations are the primary sources for this paper response to god through song is evident throughout scripture psalm 57 declares i will give thanks to you o lord among the peoples i will sing praises to you among the nations psalm 57 9 english standard version god's word gives believers guidance on praising god in ways that are pleasing and acceptable to him to equip the church family with worship god's way worship leaders and pastors must be diligent in telling and retelling the story of jesus christ in creative ways research questions various ways to apply these discoveries will be discussed in detail to assist the church in worshiping god on his terms specific research questions include 1 what does the bible say about worshiping god's way 2 how can the church equip their people better with more biblical worship what is working what needs to change as these questions are explored the specific focus will be lyrics of hymns and praise songs in general within the church setting a focused study on keith and kristyn getty's lives music writing and ministry is included in the biblical worship research as their music is primarily used for the recital portion of this project research and recital plans the recital will include selections from the gettys library of music and a few additional songs that fit the model of a five component worship song assessment these components include 1 a high view of god 2 jesus the gospel story 3 my story and personal reflection 4 call to respond and lastly 5 the commission the recital will follow these guidelines worship is always a fiercely contested topic within the church throughout its history the church has divided on the grounds of what it has deemed proper christian worship should the church practice open or closed communion what is the role of the holy spirit in worship should the liturgical calendar be followed which if any instruments are allowed in worship should the congregation sing hymns or contemporary worship songs indeed if one uses a broader sense of the term worship a usage that includes all aspects of the christian life then one will find oneself asking different questions how many sacraments does the church recognize should christians practice infant baptism or believer's baptism such questions simply demonstrate the complexity of the issue that i am discussing in no way do i propose to answer all of these questions what follows is merely an exploration of christian worship finding consistencies throughout the worldwide community of god and implications for tomorrow's church in light of its mission to go and make disciples of all nations before i begin this exploration however i would like to explain both the reason for selecting this topic and the methodology used first the term worship is often overused and misunderstood within christian circles yet as a seminary graduate i am expected to lead and to guide any congregation in worship if i do not understand the fundamentals of worship how will i be able to fulfill this expectation worship has been used in enough contexts within popular culture that it has nearly lost its meaning for example one christian might consider quiet solitude and meditation as an act of worship while another christian would consider it little more than a buddhist syncretistic influence upon christianity another christian may consider a congregation singing alongside a worship band as a time of worship while that same experience for another christian is little more than a christian concert if i am expected to lead congregations in worship then i must devote the time and effort in reflecting upon this rather complicated sensitive and ambiguous topic the second major reason for this topic of worship more specifically corporate worship grew out of my dissatisfaction with my seminary experience the intensity with which i was expected to study the bible both deterred and challenged my devotional life by this i mean that it became a struggle to mentally shift from a student of the bible to a disciple of jesus while many within the field of academia might assert that they are one and the same being a student of the bible implies that one reads scripture primarily in order to pass the next test or to write the next paper i failed to hold the word of god close to my heart during some of the more challenging experiences of seminary this temptation is strong for many seminarians and i fear that i fared worse than many in addition i failed to connect to corporate worship experiences which i found so indescribably refreshing and encouraging in college from my perspective dynamic and passionate singing was replaced with dry and dispassionate monotone liturgies my desire to experience god on sunday mornings in a very real and powerful way largely went unmet after reflecting upon my experiences i desired to know what was missing from these worship gatherings why were corporate worship experiences dissatisfying why did i and many others like me fail to connect to what many churches did on a weekly basis was it merely a personal struggle or is there a greater dynamic at work how should the church respond to a rapidly growing post christian culture in no way do i propose to write definitively on the subject nor do i anticipate that my conclusion will be imperative for all churches rather i hope that my conclusion will help direct my path in future ministry as well as provide an aid for others who notice the disconnect between the church and the emerging generations i am using the term emerging generation to describe the young adults and young professionals within north america s pop culture typically this refers to individuals between the ages 16 and 30 but is not limited to this age group what we are experiencing in our culture is not merely a generation gap but a change in how people view the world in this project emerging generation and emerging culture will be used synonymously finally a word on the methodology behind this project i will begin with a summary of biblical theology of worship as well as a survey of biblical history while highlighting concurrent themes of worship throughout both the old and new testaments furthermore i will heavily rely upon the research of others as i attempt to summarize my findings this biblical theology will be followed by a brief evaluation of church history with particular emphasis on transitions within the realm of corporate christian worship from there i will move on to a reflection and evaluation of today s corporate worship experiences the emphasis will be given to finding different cultural expressions of corporate worship i will then evaluate today s emerging generation with a particular emphasis on the primary characteristics of a postmodern culture and an appropriate contextualization of corporate christian worship for that culture the primary goal of the project is to determine a theologically appropriate response to the emerging culture s spiritual needs recent trends in baptist worship have revealed an interest in liturgical forms and some movement toward more thoughtful worship content and order in what has historically been a free church worship tradition the fields of liturgical theology and liturgical anthropology have produced research that indicates that there is validity to this interest and that the order of worship elements can be instructive as is the content of worship when both are oriented around the gospel s shape and truth e g the gospel of the glory of christ the worshiper is pointed to christ who is the object of faith and the facilitator of spiritual formation through the holy spirit the result is a worshiper who becomes like the one he holds in view in worship this survey of representative churches in north american baptist history ca 1650 1910 reveals that there has always been some evidence regarding the gospel s presence in baptist worship this has not always been due to deliberate thought and planning but because the gospel controls its forms where a church has held the gospel its worship has reflected that conviction where the gospel has been lost worship is at least reflective of that if not partially the precipitator these churches reflect varying degrees of gospel content and form the historical trend demonstrates that overall baptists have held the gospel often in the face of stiff opposition this grip on grace has been reflected consistently in their worship and likely is at least one of the reasons that they have continued to grow their growth is at least partially in direct correlation to their worshiping in light of the cross they have not just sung of the death burial and resurrection of jesus but they have engaged it in corporate worship and reflected the effects of this encounter with christlikeness in their daily lives of worship
