excerpt from a history of gothic art in england in the vast field of archaeology which opens widely before the historian of gothic art the author admits his many disabilities many ignorances and much of his knowledge to be superficial or second hand still his aim has been less to tabulate the conclusions of arch ology than to exhibit the broad impulses of design as being the vital expressions of english gothic and for this purpose he has gone rather to the buildings themselves than to the experts of arch ological detail in two points only has he attempted something more than generalization first in the distinction of the english style as a true line of gothic creation native in its origin and in its progress and separate by its qualities from the continental styles secondly as to the existence in the english art of local schools and centres of craft which made distinct sub styles in their districts his survey of the cathedrals and most of the monastic remains and larger parish churches of england has given him opinions which on the one hand are at variance with the assertion of the great french architecture being the mother of all the gothics sending her children into all the countries of north west europe and on the other with the idea of a central masonic guild whose organization monopolized the arts of design for all the centuries of medi val church building he has found rather national and local variation than european solidarity in gothic and would wish to point to the constant english tradition as proof since the conquest of a native craftsmanship free alike from continental importation and masonic dictation his survey of english examples has however brought him face to face with the obliterations of this national and local history in our art that have come from the methods of the gothic revival during the last sixty years very often it has been necessary to correct present day appearances by the evidence of prints and drawings made before restoration among such he must express his especial indebtedness to the collections of measured and other drawings of architectural students published in the sketch books of the architectural association and in those which bear the name of spring gardens and john of gaunt about the publisher forgotten books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books find more at forgottenbooks.com this book is a reproduction of an important historical work forgotten books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy in rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition we do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works
