Jacques Ellul, a former member of a law faculty at the University of Bordeaux, was recognized as a brilliant and penetrating commentator on the relationship between theology and sociology. In The Meaning of the City, he presents what he finds in the Bible: a sophisticated, coherent theology of the city fully applicable to today's urbanized society. Ellul believes that the city symbolizes the supreme work of man and as such represents man's ultimate rejection of God; therefore, it is the city where lies man's rebellious heart that must be reformed. The author stresses the fact that the Bible does not find man's fulfillment in a return to an idyllic Eden but points rather to a life of communion with the Savior in the city. Transfigured, the meaning of the city, says John Wilkinson in his introductory essay to the book, is the theological counterpoint to Ellul's technological society, a work that analyzed the phenomenon of the autonomous and totally manipulative post-industrial world. Ellul takes issue with those who idealistically plan new urban environments for man as though man alone can negate the inherent diabolism of the city. For Ellul, the history of the city from the times of Cain and Nimrod through to Babylon and Jerusalem reveals a tendency to destroy the human being for the sake of human works. Nevertheless, continuing the theme of the tension between two realities that characterizes all his works, Ellul sees God as electing the city as itself an instrument of grace for the believer. William Stringfellow describes the meaning of the city as a book of startling significance which should rank beside Reinhold Niebuhr's Moral Man and Immoral Society as a work of truly momentous potential. Douglass D. McFerran adds that it is a book worth serious consideration by anyone interested in the relationship between religious commitment and secular involvement, and John Wilkinson sums it up: there are very few convincingly religious analyses of the sociological phenomena of the present day. Ellul's biblically based sociology is today furnishing the matter for a large and growing group of social Protestants, particularly in the United States.

Jesus taught, healed, and wandered in the wilderness, but he died in the city. Jacques Ellul lived a double life: on one hand, he was an astute observer and critic of the modern technological society and its penchant for efficiency and productivity on the other he was a prophet deeply concerned about spiritual realities Jesus and the city brings together the two forces that dominated his writing technique and theology linking four of Ellul's seminal sociological and theological works the technological society the meaning of the city the technological system and apocalypse Jesus and the city brings to light the meaning of our shared technological and spiritual history from Cain's rebellion and the birth of the city to the new Jerusalem and the reign of Christ arguing that the cities are God's idea and using clear biblical principles McClung urges believers not to abandon the cities but to learn to transform them by the power of God

Civitas is an interdisciplinary collection of essays on the meaning of the city as human artifact repository of memory and the image either of heaven or hell drawing on scholars of Bible theology worship literature and the visual arts the collection traces religious notions of the city from biblical times to the present this work is especially suitable for courses on the city whether those courses be sponsored by departments of religious studies literature sociology or history publisher
