is it citizenship of a state or status as a human being that confers human rights on a person if a person is stateless how and in what way do human rights still apply to them this book addresses these questions in the context of international human rights law and the notion of the right to have rights the politics of human rights provides a systematic introductory overview of the nature and development of human rights at the same time it offers an engaging argument about human rights and their relationship with politics the author argues that human rights have only a slight relation to natural rights and they are historically novel in large part they are a post 1945 reaction to genocide which is in turn linked directly to the lethal potentialities of the nation state he suggests that an understanding of human rights should nonetheless focus primarily on politics and that there are no universally agreed moral or religious standards to uphold them they exist rather in the context of social recognition within a political association a consequence of this is that the 1948 universal declaration is a political not a legal or moral document vincent goes on to show that human rights are essentially reliant upon the self limitation capacity of the civil state with the development of this state certain standards of civil behavior have become for a sector of humanity slowly and painfully more customary he shows that these standards of civility have extended to a broader society of states at their best human rights are an ideal civil state vocabulary the author explains that we comprehend both our own humanity and human rights through our recognition relations with other humans principally via citizenship of a civil state vincent concludes that the paradox of human rights is that they are upheld to a degree by the civil state but the point of such rights is to protect against another dimension of this same tradition the nation state human rights are essentially part of a struggle at the core of the state tradition this is a new edition of this popular introduction to the politics of human rights tony evans argues that the state's central role in protecting and promoting rights has been severely weakened under globalization and that as a consequence human rights are becoming less attainable as the value of the market grows the value of individual human rights decreases the author departs from traditional interpretations of human rights by focusing on the political economy of human rights rather than on the philosophical or legal aspects he analyses how issues related to globalization such as the environment population movement patterns and free trade impact on individual human rights in conclusion he argues that the universal declaration on human rights and other major treaties must be renegotiated to take globalization into account international human rights law is founded on the premise that all persons by virtue of their essential humanity should enjoy all human rights exceptional distinctions for example between citizens and non citizens can be made only if they serve a legitimate state objective and are proportional to the achievement of the objective non citizens can include migrants refugees and asylum seekers victims of trafficking foreign students temporary visitors and stateless people this publication looks at the diverse sources of international law and emerging international standards protecting the rights of non citizens including international conventions and reports by un and treaty bodies
