excerpt from on the errors and mischiefs of modern diplomacy as based upon the assumed prerogative of the crown in matters of peace and war does it not seem in the highest degree inconsistent that a people who claim the right of exercising through their representatives a summary judgment on all matters of domestic policy from the regulation of the succession to the crown down to the merest parish road bill should have no deliberative authority in matters which concern the territorial and other material interests of the country and its honour before the world its very position as a great nation does it not seem in the last degree absurd that the crown should have the barren privilege of declaring war when it cannot put a soldier afoot or a ship afloat without the previous sanction of parliament is it to be tolerated that the country having made the necessary provisions for carrying on a war having made heavy sacrifices for it in purse and person should see it brought to a close by an ignominious or unmeaning treaty of peace in which mayhap none of the objects with which the war was undertaken are duly considered at the mere will and pleasure of the sovereign and his advisers for the time being without the opportunity of interposing a word of remonstrance or even of suggestion or opinion on the subject an impartial judgment unfettered by party trammels or the prejudices of routine can only answer these propositions in the affirmative and yet whilst all other questions of administrative practice have been and are habitually made the subject of jealous and painstaking scrutiny there has as yet been no attempt at reform in a department of government which it is no exaggeration to say transcends all others in magnitude and importance in justification of the last portion of the above remarks it may be observed that in matters of internal policy and notably in the imposition of taxes a false step on the part of the executive is immediately controllable by parliament and may be remedied before any ill consequences have occurred thus a proposed tax on matches for instance was withdrawn and the desiderated amount made up by imposing an additional penny on the income tax whereas an error in foreign policy whether it be of war or peace or other diplomatic arrangement involving perhaps thousands of lives millions of treasure or the dearest sovereign rights of the state is irrevocable and without remedy until it has run its course about the publisher forgotten books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books find more at forgottenbooks com this book is a reproduction of an important historical work forgotten books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy in rare
