this fascinating volume on submerged prehistoric landscapes of the north sea brings together for the first time comparative archaeological evidence from norway denmark germany netherlands and the uk the reports describe a range of submerged sites and artefacts occupied or used during the late pleistocene and early holocene periods of glacially controlled low sea level when large areas of the north west european continental shelf were dry land they show that palaeolithic mesolithic and neolithic peoples created settlements on the contemporaneous coastlines at periods of low sea level and probably in the hinterlands of the central north sea sometimes known as doggerland the age of most known submerged sites is in the range of 8000 5000 years ago but older submerged sites have been discovered outside the north sea region as well as recording existing findings the contributions analyse the potential for prehistoric archaeology research on the floor of the north sea and plan those subjects most requiring study the volume also recommends ways to cooperate across national boundaries and with industry on future research and protection of prehistoric sites on the sea floor modern borders of all kinds political geographical and social effect the kinds of prehistoric narratives archaeologists can write borders that dominate today did not exist in prehistory this volume works across such borders and focuses specifically on the region between the rivers forth and tyne an area divided by the modern political border between scotland and england the introduction and opening chapters consider the impact of the anglo scots and similar borders on our understanding of prehistoric patterns of activity the introduction also asks whether when and to what extent this could be considered a coherent region in the prehistoric past further chapters explore the history of research in the region including field survey and aerial photography another nine chapters discuss the results of recent research including new and older excavations or conduct regional analyses of artefacts and mortuary practices starting with the late upper palaeolithic and continuing with studies from the early neolithic through to the late iron age taken as a whole the publication suggests that while there was no coherent tyne forth region in prehistory except for perhaps in the late iron age research at this regional scale provides a strong basis for appreciating past cultural interaction at a variety of scales from publisher s website the chapters in this edited volume present multi disciplinary case studies of prehistoric archaeological sites located on now submerged portions of the continental shelf each chapter represents an extension of the known prehistoric record beyond the modern shoreline case studies represent central themes of landscape change climate change and societal development using new technologies for mapping monitoring and managing these sites grahame clark s book examines the development of prehistoric archaeology at cambridge and the achievements of its graduates placing this theme against the background of the growth of archaeology as an academic discipline worldwide prehistory in cambridge began to be taught formally in 1920 and emerged as a full tripos soon after the second world war from the outset it focused on the aims and methods of archaeological research providing in addition for combinations of study options ranging from early prehistory to the archaeology of the major civilisations of the old world and the protohistory of northern europe the measure of its success is shown by the achievement of cambridge graduates at home and overseas in both the study and the field a significant outcome of their work has been the widespread recognition of archaeology as a subject of broad educational value not merely for undergraduates but for human beings the world over dorothy garrod opened many doors not only was she the first female professor at cambridge university but she illuminated and in some cases initiated some of prehistoric archaeology s most central issues the quiet yet self possessed woman was best known as a fieldworker often venturing into dangerous regions such as kurdistan her first and highly successful excavation revealed fragments of neanderthal fossils in gibraltar this volume reviews modern research on this site as well as exploring other issues which interested the disney professor of archaeology hominid remains from mount carmel palaeolithic sites in the zagros mountains bulgaria and britain and the cultural evidence for the beginning of near eastern food production which garrod called natufian also included are papers concerned with her life background and published work the topics span and continuing relevance are testament to dorothy garrod s remarkable character and great achievements
