contexts understanding the language of the written law understanding language use in forensic and judicial processes and the provision of linguistic evidence the discipline of forensic linguistics is not homogenous it involves a range of experts and researchers in different areas of the field a linguistic fingerprint is a concept put forward by some scholars that each human being uses language differently and that this difference between people involves a collection of markers which stamps a speaker writer as unique similar to a fingerprint under this view it is assumed that every individual uses languages differently and this difference can be observed as a fingerprint it is formed as a result of a merged language style a person s linguistic fingerprint can be reconstructed from the individual s daily interactions and relate to a variety of self reported personality characteristics situational variables and physiological markers e g blood pressure cortisol testosterone in the process of an investigation the emphasis should be on the relative rather than the absolute difference between the authors and how investigators can classify their texts however argues that although the concept of linguistic fingerprinting is attractive to law enforcement agencies there is so far little hard evidence to support the notion in order to carry out the cesium test on habits of utilizing two to three letter words and vowel initial words in a sentential clause the occurrences of each type of word in the text must be identified and the distribution plotted in each sentence the cesium distribution for these two habits will be compared with the average sentence length of the text the two sets of values should track each other any altered section of the text would show a distinct discrepancy between the values of the two reference points the tampered section will exhibit a different pattern from the rest of the text contents general linguistics 1 applied linguistics
