it's 2031 and Cemeli Kangas is dead. Fernio keeps watch over his dominion of Siberian forest, enjoying more reach than he's ever had before. His job is not only to watch over Korok Shiru Ruini and Acor but make sure the year-old giant wolves learn all that there is to learn about what makes humans the dominant species. Everything they can be. Tiia is searching for answers, suddenly losing everything and suddenly getting it back. Last year evoked something deep. She starts spending time with a single mother whose outlook answers a lot of her questions, but looming over it all is the mystery of this lady's husband and his shady involvement in international crime. Sammy is disillusioned. His life stays shockingly similar after gaining possession of a magic he can wield. He's in a more stable position in every sense than he ever has. An illicit affair with a secretary shows Sammy that still waters run deep. Life is long and full of situations that either don't satisfy you enough or satisfy too much. Viktor lost two fingers in the Nevada sunrise last year. It wasn't enough to completely lose his grip on things. He can still carry the weight he needs to. Only now it's with enough physical burden involved that it becomes an active reminder of the worth of his labor. Alex Coleman got his family back in the sunrise. He appreciates his life as much as this good fortune will elicit, but gets more complications into his swing of things when something flies through his window. It's an unnecessary complication, but one he learns to love at new heights of their power. The world's magics keep getting irritated by mankind's excess. When a fourth magic rears its head, it increases the potency of it all. Almost like Nevada sunrise did. Only this time it's a perpetual flow rather than a single explosive cataclysm because life is long.

This is the first critical edition of the works of Andrew Lang (1844-1912), the Scottish writer whose enormous output spanned the whole range of late nineteenth-century intellectual culture. Neglected since his death, partly because of the diversity of his interests and the volume of his writing, his cultural centrality and the interdisciplinary nature of his work make him a vital figure for contemporary scholars. This volume covers Lang's wide and influential engagement with the central areas of late nineteenth-century anthropology. Lang made decisive interventions in debates around the meaning of folk tales and the origins of religion, as well as being an important figure in the investigation of spiritualist claims through psychical research. The work reproduced here includes journalism, essays, extracts from books, and previously unpublished letters which together articulate and challenge some of the central ideas and discussions of the period including evolution the relation between modern and non modern cultures the nature of scientific claims to truth and the consequences of materialism the volume will provide new and illuminating ways of understanding and assessing the period for scholars across a range of disciplines including those interested in the histories of the fairy story of science of the occult of colonialism and of anthropology
