the relational systems model for family therapy presents a multi systems approach to family therapy that teaches the therapist important self differentiating capacities that set the tone for creating a powerful therapeutic atmosphere while the model demands no specific treatment procedures it does rely on the therapist's capacity to adhere to its basic ideas as she/he is the most vital factor in the model's success in the relational systems model for family therapy. Author Donald R. Bardill encourages the therapist to be the learning vehicle for the integration of the four realities of life: self, other, context, and spiritual, and the differentiating process that is necessary for human survival, safety, and growth. Understanding this model allows therapists to lead clients to heightened self-awareness and the realization of their human potential, both important factors for intellectual growth, emotional maturity, and problem solving. To this end, readers learn about the self-differentiating therapist; the person of the therapist is the crucial variable in an effective family treatment process. The facing process the client faces, such as issues of self-identity, life purpose, thought and behavior patterns, emotionalized fears, and the future emotionalized right/wrong focus, is on consequences of actions rather than right/wrong judgments in relationship issues. Life stances, the uniqueness of the individual, affects their connection to the life realities. Family grid, a way for the therapist to organize and talk about important family systems dynamics, the therapeutic paradox, the client's worldview, is examined through the therapist's worldview, and a new worldview is formed. The relational systems model for family therapy is an important handbook for practitioners and students in the fields of clinical social work, psychology, marriage and family therapy, mental health counseling, counseling psychology, pastoral counseling, and psychiatric nursing. The book is also useful as a supplemental text for advanced undergraduate classes and postgraduate seminars in family therapy and family counseling. The self-differentiation nature of the content also lends this book useful to self-help readers.
