when seeking to test specific hypotheses in large data sets social and behavioral scientists often construct models although useful in such situations many phenomena of interest do not occur in large samples and do not lend themselves to precise measurement in addition a focus on hypothesis testing can constrict the potential use of models as organizing devices for emerging patterns summaries of what we believe we know about the dynamics of situation this book bridges the gap between quantitative and qualitative modelers to reconcile the need to impose rigor and to understand the influence of context although there are many different uses for models there is also the realistic possibility of doing credible research without their use a critical reexamination of the assumptions used in quantitatively oriented models however suggests ways to increase their effectiveness as organizers of both quantitative and qualitative data students of methods in psychology sociology education management social work and public health and their instructors are increasingly expected to become familiar with both quantitative and qualitative approaches unfortunately they find few vehicles for communication regarding the implications of overlapping work between the two approaches using models as organizing devices for a better dialogue between assumptions and data might facilitate this communication process continuing advances in biomedical research and statistical methods call for a constant stream of updated cohesive accounts of new developments so that the methodologies can be properly implemented in the biomedical field responding to this need computational methods in biomedical research explores important current and emerging computatio the motion and deformation of rocks are processes of fundamental importance in shaping the earth from outer crustal layers to the deep mantle reconstructions of the evolution of the earth therefore require detailed knowledge of the geometry of deformation structures and their relative timing of the motions leading to deformation structures and of the mechanisms governing these motions this volume contains a collection of 22 papers on field experimental and theoretical studies that add to our knowledge of these processes this book provides an overview of how boreal and temperate tree species have adapted their annual development cycle to the seasonally varying climatic conditions therefore the frost hardy dormant phase and the susceptible growth phase are synchronized with the seasonality of the climate the volume discusses the annual cycle including various attributes such as timing of bud burst and other phenological events seasonality of photosynthetic capacity or the frost hardiness of the trees during the last few decades dynamic ecophysiological models have been used increasingly in studies of the annual cycle particularly when projecting the ecological effects of climate change the main emphasis of this volume is on combining modelling with experimental studies and on the importance of the biological realism of the models we estimate a three factor model to fit both the time series dynamics and cross sectional shapes of the u s term structure in the model three unobserved factors drive a discrete time stochastic discount process with one factor reverting to a fixed mean and a second factor reverting to a third factor to exploit the conditional density of yields we estimate the model with a kalman filter a procedure that also allows us to use data for six maturities without making special assumptions about measurement errors the estimated model reproduces the basic shapes of the average term structure including the hump in the yield curve and the flat slope of the volatility curve a likelihood ratio test favors the model over a nested two factor model another likelihood ratio test however rejects the no arbitrage restrictions the model imposes on the estimates an analysis of the measurement errors suggests that the three factors still fail to capture enough of the comovement and persistence of yields abstract
