in arabic literature and philosophy mysticism is one of the most significant traditions the fountainhead of sufism in islam is still a debatable issue the persians had many famous mystic poets arabic literature has only one great mystical poet of pure arabic descent worthy to stand next to the persian masters sharaf ad din umar ibn ali as sa di known as ibn al farid or the notary s son 1181 1253 who was born in cairo he was dedicated from early manhood to the mystic s method of withdrawal from the world he was utterly satisfied in later life to remember with ecstatic pleasure the pilgrimage he had made to mecca and to meditate upon the union with the spirit of the prophet which he had then experienced ibn al farid s diwan of mystical odes which was first collected by his grandson is small in comparison with similar works of persian mystics the diwan could be viewed as a collection of homogeneous poems expressing the ecstasy and longing of a devoted lover to become one with his beloved it is equally conspicuous to assume that with the exception of the khamriyya and the poem of the way the bulk of ibn al farid s diwan should be read simply as love poetry void of any mystical and spiritual overtones in the mean time it would equally be an exaggeration to adopt nabulsi s argument which maintains that ibn al farid did not harbor a thought without spiritual implications ibn al farid s diwan may well be considered a miracle of literary accomplishments if all critics seem to agree that al ta iyyatu l kubra is his masterpiece we can safely say that the khamriyya is the second jewel in the collection it is a masterpiece in its own right and one of the longest poems after the poem of the way in this piece every word is transparent every word is a world bathing in tradition carrying two meanings or more the symbolism of khamriyya is not to be found in any other poem of the poet s collection love is the wine of life the khamriyya dedicated to this divine wine stands in its own right as an incomparable masterpiece in the history of arabic mystical poetry
